

R |

REFUGEE, ASYLUM, AND INTERNATIONAL OPERATIONS DIRECTORATE (RAIO)

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services

RAIO DIRECTORATE – OFFICER TRAINING

RAIO Combined Training Course

CREDIBILITY

TRAINING MODULE

RAIO Template Rev. 2/21/2012

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO) – LIMITED OFFICIAL USE / LAW ENFORCEMENT SENSITIVE

DATE: 6/20/2016

Page 1 of 90

P.36 - P.77 非常难检验外国 doc 真实性 能通过 check 和 DETAILED 名字来进行比对验证

通过 doc 和 ③ 证据和其它文件来发现 inconsistency 发现后

Credibility

P.37 必须给 applicant 一个解釋不一致，缺乏细节和不可信的机会

P.39 哪怕不 credibility, 但是 notion to reopen (通过未表态 (巴基斯坦))
This Page Left Blank Intentionally Christian的例子

P.12 detailed, internally consistent some corroborative docs for testimony → credibility minor discrepancies 不影响

Negative factor balance positive factor

P.13 根据个人情况来考虑

long journey to U.S + 8周在 detention + her own explanation

P.14 retell story inevitably have some flaws.

P.16 最近事件提供细节更多

P.17 follow-up questions 用来 elicit details
sample question

P.18 提供 evidence 或者 No evidence 作出解释

P.19 minor inconsistencies/omissions 无所谓 documents contradict the claim X

P.21 找不到某个人，但是找到了某次特定的 event，根据 国情报告。

P.26 两次回答不一，出现 inconsistency.

P.27 解释 inconsistency (I'm sorry, my memory is poor
I misspoke earlier)

RAIO Template Rev. 2/21/2012

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO) - LIMITED OFFICIAL USE / LAW ENFORCEMENT SENSITIVE

DATE: 6/20/2016

Page 2 of 90

P.30 移民局注意到有类似模板，单词，内词都一样，
一定要 avoid !!!

P.33 给 applicant advise credibility 决定之前，必须给 applicant
一个解释机会

AILA Doc. No 17101062. (Posted 10/10/17) 268

P.34 applicant 必须在本地人之间 precise 记住

P.42 after threat, 需要马上 flee, 否则会被 questioning.
P.43 害怕需要知道 role (比如童工)

P.48 false doc 允许条件情况

Credibility

RAIO Directorate - Officer Training / RAIO Combined Training Course

P.65 demeanor, cultural responsiveness 相比于 consistency, details, plausibility 来说, 据份量少
CREDIBILITY

Training Module

P.66 demeanor alone 不足以支持 adverse credibility

MODULE DESCRIPTION

This module provides guidance on evaluating the credibility of an applicant's testimony, factors upon which a credibility determination may be based, factors upon which a credibility finding may not be based, and how to determine whether any non-credible aspects of a claim affect eligibility. Additionally, the module provides guidance on how to handle credibility issues that arise during the interview.

TERMINAL PERFORMANCE OBJECTIVE(S)

When interviewing the applicant and adjudicating the case, you, the officer, will be able to assess credibility and articulate appropriate reasons supporting your credibility determination.

P.67 美国文化中, 回答问题需要直视, 不要回避, 否则被视为
ENABLING PERFORMANCE OBJECTIVES 欺骗和不真诚

1. Distinguish between appropriate and inappropriate factors to consider in evaluating credibility of the applicant and the evidence presented.
2. Distinguish between minor v. substantial and internal v. external inconsistencies in the evidence presented by the applicant.
3. Identify credibility issues raised in cross-cultural communication among parties to the interview.
4. Identify the role of corroborating documentary evidence in evaluating credibility of the applicant and the evidence presented.
5. Address credibility problems at the interview.
6. Explain the analytical framework for a credibility determination.

P.75 计划生育 case 用的文件 (选看 case)

RAIO Template Rev. 2/21/2012

FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO) - LIMITED OFFICIAL USE / LAW ENFORCEMENT SENSITIVE DATE: 6/20/2016

Page 3 of 90

P.76 U) 需要提供 evidence (2) 如果没有 evidence 需要提供
解释

P.79 Asylum office 可以看到你申请美签签证的信息
(Immigrant & non-immigrant visa) 269

P.80 asylun 信息需要跟美国 visa 申请一致

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1	INTRODUCTION	10
2	GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.....	11
2.1	Duty to Remain Neutral.....	11
2.2	Burden of Proof - A Cooperative Approach.....	11
2.3	Take into Account the Factors as a Whole.....	11
2.4	No Moral Component.....	13
2.5	Credibility Concerns Must Be Clearly Articulated	14
3	AN ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK FOR CREDIBILITY DETERMINATIONS.....	14
3.1	Step One: Identify the Type of Credibility Concern	15
3.1.1	Detail.....	16
3.1.2	Consistency.....	19
3.1.3	External Consistency	21
3.1.4	Plausibility	23
3.1.5	Other Relevant Factors	26
3.2	Step Two: Determine if the Credibility Concern is Material	26
3.3	Step Three: Inform the Applicant of Your Concern.....	26
3.4	Step Four: Give the Applicant an Opportunity to Explain	27
3.5	Step Five: Assess the Reasonableness of the Explanation	27
4	WHAT MAY NOT BE CONSIDERED IN MAKING A CREDIBILITY DETERMINATION	27
4.1	An Officer's Views of a Country or Situation.....	28
4.2	An Officer's Moral Judgment	28
4.3	An Officer's Personal Opinion about How an Individual Would Act	28
4.4	Use of an Attorney.....	28
4.5	Self-Serving Statements	29
4.6	Delay in Filing the Claim	29
4.7	Contact—Or Lack of Contact—with U.S. Embassy	29

Credibility

4.8 Failure to Apply for Refugee Status in a Third Country	29
4.9 Similar Claims	30
4.10 Claims That Differ.....	33
4.11 COI Fails To Corroborate Claim.....	34
4.12 Ineligibility for Benefit.....	34
5 ADDRESSING CREDIBILITY AT THE INTERVIEW	34
5.1 Probing Credibility	34
5.1.1 Elicit general biographical information about the applicant at the beginning of the interview to establish a baseline.....	35
5.1.2 Listen carefully to what the applicant says	35
5.1.3 Elicit as much detail as possible	35
5.1.4 When appropriate, ask questions out of chronological order	35
5.1.5 When appropriate, ask the applicant to explain certain events a second time.....	36
5.1.6 Develop a firm understanding of any discrepancy before asking the applicant to explain ..	36
5.1.7 Take careful notes	36
5.1.8 Closely review documents submitted by the applicant.....	36
5.1.9 Provide the applicant an opportunity to address perceived credibility flaws	37
5.1.10..... Remaining composed and professional, even if fraud is suspected	38
6 SPLIT CREDIBILITY FINDING.....	38
7 TOTALITY OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES.....	40
7.1 Cross Cultural Misunderstandings	40
7.1.1 Body language	40
7.1.2 Customs.....	40
7.1.3 Culturally-based perceptions	41
7.1.4 Interpreter's or applicant's English speaking ability, language, or dialect	41
7.2 Trauma from Flight and Past Persecution	43
7.3 Submission of Fraudulent Documents.....	43
7.3.1 General Rule	43
7.3.2 Considerations.....	43
7.4 Personal Background of the Applicant.....	45
7.5 Time Constraints	45
7.6 Difficulty in Evaluating the Behavior of a Stranger.....	45

RAIO Template Rev. 2/21/2012FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY (FOUO) – LIMITED OFFICIAL USE / LAW ENFORCEMENT SENSITIVE DATE: 6/20/2016
Page 8 of 90

[an] overall credibility determination does not necessarily rise or fall on each element of the witness's testimony, but rather is more properly decided on the cumulative effect of the entirety of all such elements. Where, as here, the asylum applicant has presented testimony that was for the most part quite detailed, internally consistent, materially in accord with his asylum application, and accepted by the [adjudicator], and there is supportive evidence of general country conditions and some corroborative documentation of the applicant's testimony, the [adjudicator] is not justified...in concluding that the applicant is not credible based on a few equivocal aspects not logically compelled by the record or by reason or common sense.¹

Examples

- Matter of Pula

The BIA found that the credibility of an applicant's testimony was not impeached by minor discrepancies in the written asylum application, which was prepared by interpreters, "[i]n view of the detail, consistency, and candor of the applicant's lengthy testimony."²

- Matter of O-D-

The BIA upheld an immigration judge's (IJ) negative credibility finding in the asylum case of an applicant who submitted a fraudulent national identity card in an attempt to establish central elements of his claim – his identity and nationality – and failed to provide an explanation for doing so. There were also inconsistencies found between the applicant's testimony in his Form I-589 asylum application and his testimony at the immigration hearing. The BIA reviewed the IJ's credibility determination based upon the totality of the circumstances, considering not only the submission of the fraudulent document, but the entirety of the record and found "that the remaining inconsistent record presented by the respondent is insufficient to overcome the pall cast on the respondent's credibility by virtue of his submission of the counterfeit document."³

- Matter of B -

Negative factors in a case must be balanced against positive factors to determine whether, on the whole, an applicant is credible. This proposition holds true even where there are several factors that may point toward a lack of credibility. For example, in Matter of B- the BIA considered an IJ's negative credibility finding based on several factors – the applicant's allegedly evasive demeanor while testifying, inability to remember exact dates, departure to the U.S. while his brother and family remained behind, and failure to have others from Afghanistan testify to corroborate his general experience. In overturning the IJ's determination, the BIA, "impressed with the indications of the applicant's truthfulness," accepted the applicant's explanations for not looking at the judge while testifying and his inability to remember exact dates. The BIA also rejected the relevance of the applicant's brother's staying behind and discounted his failure to provide corroborating evidence that would have been of limited usefulness. Because the applicant's testimony was consistent throughout the examination and lengthy cross-examination, consistent with his written application, and contained no embellishments, the BIA found that on the whole, the applicant was credible.⁴

¹ Jishiashvili v. U.S. Att'y Gen., 402 F.3d 386, 396 (3d Cir. 2005).

² Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. 467, 472 (BIA 1987).

³ Matter of O-D-, 21 I&N Dec. 1079, 1084 (BIA 1998).

- Matter of Kasinga

根据个人情况来综合考虑

Taking into account all the factors as a whole refers not only to the whole of the applicant's testimony, but also to the individual circumstances of each applicant. The BIA rejected a negative credibility finding that was based upon an alleged lack of rationality, persuasiveness, and consistency in the applicant's presentation, finding that the 19-year-old applicant presented a plausible, detailed, and internally consistent asylum claim. The BIA considered the applicant's age (17) at the time of her flight from her country, her father's death, her separation from her mother and control by an "unsympathetic aunt," her long journey to the U.S., her eight months in INS detention at several facilities, and her explanations for any possible credibility concerns when determining that the applicant was credible.⁵

2.4 No Moral Component

There is no moral component to credibility determinations. The purpose of evaluating the credibility of an applicant is solely to determine eligibility, not to punish the applicant if he or she is untruthful.

The fact that an applicant may have made untrue statements during an interview raises questions about the veracity of the claim and should be considered. However, not all untrue statements lead to a denial or referral of the application.

Example

⁴ Matter of B-, 21 I&N Dec. 66, 70-71 (BIA 1995).

⁵ Matter of Kasinga, 21 I&N Dec. 357, 364 (BIA 1996).

A Salvadoran citizen told an INS enforcement officer that he was Mexican. When the applicant applied for asylum, he asserted that he was Salvadoran. The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit found that the immigration judge erred in finding that the misrepresentation made the applicant ineligible for asylum. The misrepresentation supported the claim for asylum eligibility, because the applicant's misrepresentation to the enforcement officer whom he feared might deport him was consistent with the applicant's testimony that he feared deportation to El Salvador.⁶

2.5 Credibility Concerns Must Be Clearly Articulated

A credibility finding must be clearly articulated and based on objective facts. It cannot be based on "gut feelings" or intuition, as intuition and gut feelings are unreliable, particularly when interviewing a stranger from a different culture through an interpreter. To ensure that your credibility determination is fair and impartial, follow the analytical framework outlined below.

3 AN ANALYTICAL FRAMEWORK FOR CREDIBILITY DETERMINATIONS

You must evaluate credibility in every case and carefully analyze the applicant's testimony in light of all of the evidence in the record. After gathering all the facts, if you find that the applicant is not credible, you must provide a specific, clearly articulated basis for the adverse credibility finding.⁷

An applicant's retelling of his or her story to you during the interview will inevitably have some flaws. Evaluating those flaws is fundamental to the evaluation of eligibility and arguably the most challenging part of your job.

The testimony an applicant gives during the interview must be reasonably detailed, consistent with what he or she and others say and have said before, and plausible in light of logic. This testimony is evidence, just like a passport is evidence of identity or a human rights report is evidence of the political and economic conditions of a specific country or region.

The credibility determination is an evidentiary determination. It is the basis upon which you decide what evidence to use in your assessment and how much weight to give that evidence.

⁶ Turcios v. INS, 821 F.2d 1396, 1400-1401 (9th Cir. 1987).

⁷ See, e.g., Matter of A-S-, 21 I&N Dec. 1106, 1110 (BIA 1998); Hajiani-Niroumand v. INS, 26 F.3d. 832, 838 (8th Cir. 1994); and Malek v. INS, 198 F.3d 1016, 1021 (7th Cir. 2000).

determined whether the testimony contained material flaws in detail, internal consistency, external consistency, or plausibility. See Other Relevant Factors below.

You must learn to identify and distinguish among these factors. For example, a political activist is unable to tell you the name of the party leader. Is this a lack of detail or a plausibility factor?

3.1.1 Detail

General Rule

An applicant should be able to provide sufficient detail to indicate first-hand knowledge of the events that form the basis of his or her claim. Therefore, the applicant's ability or inability to provide detailed descriptions of the main points of the claim is critical to the credibility evaluation. The applicant's willingness and ability to provide those descriptions may be directly related to your skill at placing the applicant at ease and eliciting all the information necessary to make a proper decision.⁸ Impatience with an applicant or frequent interruptions may result in the applicant providing fewer details.

It is reasonable to assume that a person relating a genuine account of events that he or she has experienced will be able to provide a higher level of detail, especially sensory detail, about that event than he or she could if the account were not genuine. A person claiming a leadership role in an opposition political party should be able to provide more detail about the inner workings of the party, the leadership and the party goals, than someone who was merely a supporter. The more recent the event the greater the level of detail an applicant may be capable of providing. It is reasonable to expect more detail from an applicant describing events that took place within the past year than if he or she were describing events that took place several years ago.

The more detailed testimony an applicant gives, the more opportunities there will be for it to contain inconsistencies and contradictions. This is true for even the most truthful applicant. It is your job to determine whether those inconsistencies and/or contradictions are due to a lack of credibility or may be explained by other factors.

Factors That Impair Memory

In evaluating whether an applicant has provided sufficient detail to indicate first-hand knowledge of events, you must take into account the amount of time that has elapsed since the events occurred; the possible effects of trauma; the applicant's background, education, and culture; and any other factors that might impair the applicant's ability to remember. Additionally, you should exercise caution in determining the type of detail you expect the applicant to remember and take into account the fact that different people notice and remember different things. If several people are questioned about an event they experienced together, each will probably remember different details. The applicant will not necessarily remember the type of detail you would remember in a similar situation.

⁸ See RAIO Training Modules, Interviewing: Eliciting Testimony and Interviewing: Introduction to the Non-Adversarial Interview.

Your Duty to Elicit Detail

The applicant may not know the type of detail you seek and may believe that stating simply that he or she was arrested, without more, is sufficient to answer your question, "What happened?" Furthermore, in the refugee context, since the applicant may already have divulged the details to a case worker, he or she may believe that you already have the details.

It would be improper to find that an applicant failed to provide sufficient detail without first attempting to elicit detail from the applicant with follow-up questions. The purpose of the interview is to elicit all relevant and useful information bearing on the applicant's eligibility for the benefit being sought. Keep in mind that in a non-adversarial interview you control the interview. Therefore, you cannot reach a negative credibility finding based on lack of detail if you do not pose questions regarding the specific detail you are requesting.

Example

Follow-up Questions Regarding an Arrest

"Please describe exactly what happened to you when you were arrested."

"Where were you when you were arrested?"

"Where were you taken when you were arrested?"

"What was said to you when you were arrested?"

As with any credibility concern, if the applicant does not provide a reasonable amount of detail about an incident when asked specific questions, you must inform the applicant of your concerns and provide the applicant an opportunity to address those concerns and offer explanations for the lack of detail.

Examples

- "I've asked several questions about the circumstances surrounding your arrest, and you have only told me the place and time you were arrested. Please provide me with information about where you were taken and how you were treated."

- "If you are unable to provide these additional details, please explain to me why you cannot."
- "You said that you printed political leaflets several times at your office and that you had to hide to do so. However, you told me you cannot describe the leaflets, where you got the paper, or how you were able to hide from your co-workers. Please explain why you cannot tell me these things."

If after being asked follow-up questions focusing on specific details, the applicant still cannot provide any detail about the arrest, and if there is no explanation for the applicant's inability to provide detail, the applicant may be found not credible.

The Applicant's Obligation to be Truthful

Just as you are obligated to elicit relevant details, the applicant is required to tell the truth and fully cooperate with you in establishing the facts of his or her claim. The applicant must:

- supply all pertinent information concerning him or herself and past experience in as much detail as is necessary to enable you to establish the relevant facts
- give a coherent explanation of all the reasons invoked in support of his application and should answer any questions you ask
- make an effort to support his or her statements by providing any available evidence, by giving satisfactory explanations for any lack of evidence, and by making every reasonable effort to procure necessary evidence

Example

(Incorrect Adverse Credibility Finding Due to Lack of Detail)

The applicant claimed that she was raped, but could not provide a description of the clothes the assailant was wearing.

Example

(Correct Adverse Credibility Finding Due to Lack of Detail)

An applicant from Nepal supplied only vague assertions that Maoists had been inquiring about him and gave few details. The applicant did not identify the names of any of the Maoists or describe them in any way. Nor did he state how many were inquiring about him; why they were looking for him; what they wanted; why he thought their interest in him persisted given that they had not inquired about him since 2001; or why he continued to fear the Maoists in light of their apparent loss of interest in him. The IJ gave the applicant an opportunity to supplement his responses to provide more detail concerning any “fear [he has] of anything bad happening to [him] or has happened to [him],” but the applicant declined to do so.⁹

3.1.2 Consistency

An applicant’s statements (oral or written) that are internally consistent, consistent with the applicant’s other statements, and consistent with other evidence in the record, such as country conditions reports, may support a positive credibility finding.¹⁰

An applicant’s testimony may contain minor inconsistencies and omissions that generally will not, alone, undermine credibility. However, substantial, material inconsistencies or omissions are a negative factor that can lead, when viewed as part of the record as a whole, to an adverse credibility finding.¹¹

Minor mistakes, such as those that result from faulty memory, may not reliably indicate that a claim is not credible. Whether an inconsistency is considered minor or substantial depends not only on the nature of the inconsistency, but also on the record as a whole.

Inconsistencies may arise during the course of the interview when the applicant contradicts himself or herself, or when the documentation presented by the applicant contradicts the claim. For example, a passport submitted to establish identity may reveal travel that indicates that the applicant was not in the country during a period when he or she claims to have been persecuted.

Inconsistencies also may occur between testimony given by family members on the same case and/or, in overseas refugee processing, between family members on cross-referenced cases.¹² In the following-to-join context, you may identify inconsistencies between ⁹ Shrestha v. Holder, 590 F.3d 1034, 1046 (9th Cir. 2010).

¹⁰ INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii); Matter of Kasinga, 21 I&N Dec. 357, 364 (BIA 1996).

¹¹ See Ismaiel v. Mukasey, 516 F.3d 1198, 1204 (10th Cir. 2008) (...the significance of an omission must be determined by the context, and rigid rules cannot substitute for common sense.), Pop v. INS, 270 F.3d 527, 531 (7th Cir. 2001); (inconsistencies went to the heart of the asylum claim). See also Bandari v. INS, 227 F.3d 1160, 1166 (9th Cir. 2000) (discrepancies not significant enough to support adverse credibility finding).

¹² Refugee resettlement cases will often be cross-referenced with other family members. For purposes of refugee interviews, discrepancies between cross-referenced cases would be considered an inconsistency, though confidentiality should be considered when addressing such issues with the applicant. In the asylum context, RAPS may reveal cases of related family members, but for confidentiality purposes those cases should not usually be referenced in the decision making process. In the following-to-join context, information in the refugee or asylum information in the principal refugee or asylum application and the following-to-join family member's testimony. These would be external credibility issues. Inconsistencies between the applicant's claim and reliable country conditions information would be considered external credibility flaws.

Internal Consistency

Dealing with internal consistency requires you to assess whether “[t]he material facts are coherent and internally consistent with facts asserted by the applicant, witnesses or dependents, and with any [personal] documentary evidence relied upon by the applicant,¹³ such as identity documents. It is for you to consider how well the evidence fits together and whether or not it contradicts itself.

In the assessment of internal consistency, you should watch for the level of detail and the introduction of inconsistencies, keeping in mind at all times that there may be mitigating circumstances in some cases, such as mental or emotional trauma, inarticulateness, fear, or mistrust of authorities.¹⁴ When dealing with either internal or external consistency make certain that you inform the applicant of your concerns (without violating confidentiality of other's asylum or refugee claims) and give the applicant an opportunity to address those concerns and offer an explanation.

Examples

The following are examples of inconsistencies or omissions that, standing alone, generally would not lead to a negative credibility finding:

- The applicant failed to list on his written application two incidents that involved harm to relatives and that were collateral to his claim.¹⁵
- The applicant stated on his written application that he had been shot at, but stated in oral testimony that he had never been shot at. The applicant explained that his representative (or in the refugee context, the RSC or application may relate to family relationships, including when and how the following-to-join applicant last had contact with the principal. While confidentiality rules preclude you from informing the applicant of those inconsistencies, they may direct the line of questioning to probe more deeply into the related issues. If some contradictory information comes to your attention, it should be treated as an external inconsistency since there is no legal connection between the two cases.

¹³ European Asylum Curriculum Course on Evidence Assessment, online materials sub-module 3, unit 3.2 “Assessing the Claim’s Credibility” (Oct. 28, 2010).

¹⁴ James A. Sweeney, Credibility, Proof and Refugee Law, 21 Int'l J. Refugee L. 700 (2009).

¹⁵ Aguilera-Cota v. INS, 914 F.2d 1375, 1383-1384 (9th Cir. 1990).

UNHCR) was the one who made the statement in the written application and the applicant signed without reading it.¹⁶

- There was an inconsistency between applicant's statement on the application that he and his brothers were accosted by "unknown armed men," and his testimony that they were accosted by "death squads."¹⁷

The last example is an example of a very common perceived inconsistency that results when an officer fails to clarify language in an interview. It is very easy to resolve such inconsistencies during the interview. "When you say 'death squads,' what do you mean?"

3.1.3 External Consistency

External consistency relates to country of origin information (COI),¹⁸ known facts, and other pieces of evidence provided by the applicant or ascertained by you in the course of your investigation.

Consistency with Known Objective Information

Material facts asserted by the applicant should be consistent with generally known facts and your COI research. Where relevant, you are required to conduct research into COI. In conducting that research you should keep in mind the difference between assessing the likelihood of future persecution and the more immediate task of determining whether the material facts asserted by the applicant in relation to past or current events are consistent with country information.

When an asylum or refugee applicant has established his or her general credibility (i.e., is sufficiently detailed, internally consistent and plausible), you can accept a claimed fact as credible when there is reliable COI to support the applicant's evidence about a material fact, and other reliable evidence does not contradict the applicant's account. For example, you will rarely find evidence that the applicant was a participant at a specific protest at a specific place and time. However, you may well find COI information to support the applicant's claim that there was such a protest at that place and time. If so, the applicant's testimony is externally consistent. Not all protests or other events, however, will be documented in COI. Nevertheless, you may still find those applicants credible based on their testimony. When in doubt, discuss the issue with your supervisor who may discuss the issue with the RAIO research unit.

¹⁶ Garrovillas v. INS, 156 F.3d 1010, 1014 (9th Cir. 1998).

¹⁷ Cordero-Trejo v. INS, 40 F.3d 482, 488 (1st Cir. 1994).

¹⁸ For additional information in using COI in adjudication, see RAIO Training Module, Researching and Using Country of Origin Information in RAIO Adjudications.

gender, level of education, and/or socioeconomic status may also play a role in the type of COI knowledge the individual has or can reasonably be expected to have. See RAIO Training Module, Researching and Using Country of Origin Information in RAIO Adjudications.

Examples

The following are examples of substantial inconsistencies that may lead to a negative credibility determination if the applicant does not provide a reasonable explanation for the inconsistency. As you read them, determine whether these inconsistencies would be considered “internal” or “external.”

- The applicant testified that she was arrested and detained only once; however, she stated in her written application that she was arrested and detained twice and provided a detailed written description of each detention.
- The applicant initially testified that he fled his home the same day that he was threatened and went into hiding in a distant village. Later, the applicant testified that he stayed in his home village and continued to work for several weeks after he was threatened.
- The applicant claimed to have been harmed because she was a member of a political party in 1984, but country conditions reports establish that the party was not founded until 1990.
- The applicant claimed that she suffered lasting economic harm and was unable to earn a livelihood because she received poor conduct grades in school on account of her religion. Examination of her school transcript indicated that she received high marks in conduct throughout her years in school.¹⁹
- The applicant stated that he had witnessed only his father’s kidnapping, not his uncle’s, but later stated that he witnessed both being kidnapped. He stated that he never saw his father again after the uniformed men took him away, but also stated that his father and his uncle were both paraded past his house. His mother’s letter, introduced as evidence, conflicted with all of the applicant’s versions of the story.²⁰

3.1.4 Plausibility

¹⁹ Pop v. INS, 270 F.3d 527, 531 (7th Cir. 2001).

²⁰ Bojorques-Villanueva v. INS, 194 F.3d 14, 16-17 (1st Cir. 1999).

Explain: _____

6. A university-educated man said he spoke Punjabi, Hindi, Bengali, and English, could not read or write Punjabi, although he claimed to have lived in Punjab and operated a business there for eight years.²⁶

Plausible or implausible? _____
Explain: _____

3.1.5 Other Relevant Factors

Other relevant factors include demeanor, candor, and responsiveness. These factors apply only in asylum adjudications. When considering these, use the analytical framework in this lesson to determine if a credibility concern is material and relates to detail, consistency, and/or plausibility. See ASM Supplement – REAL ID and Other Relevant Factors for these additional factors that you may take into consideration in the asylum context.

3.2 Step Two: Determine if the Credibility Concern is Material

A fact is material if it would influence the outcome of the eligibility determination because it relates to a required legal element. See “Applicant’s Burden” in RAIO Training Module, Evidence. Another way to say this is a fact is material if it goes to the heart of the claim. If there are inconsistencies found, are they material to the claim? Do they lead to a conclusion that the applicant’s evidence is not credible? If the answer is no to both questions, there is no credibility concern.

In asylum claims, a credibility concern need not go to the heart of the claim. See ASM Supplement – REAL ID Act and “Other Relevant Factors.”

3.3 Step Three: Inform the Applicant of Your Concern

Insufficient detail: "Why can't you tell me more about...?"

Inconsistency within the testimony: "Earlier in the interview you said X, now you are saying Y..."

Inconsistency between the testimony and other evidence: "Your I-589 says X, now you are telling me Y..."

两次回答一，出现不一致性

Implausibility: "How is it possible that...?"

²⁶ See Malhi v. INS, 336 F.3d 989, 993 (9th Cir. 2003).

3.4 Step Four: Give the Applicant an Opportunity to Explain

The following are suggested phrases for eliciting an explanation:

“Help me understand . . .”

“Why is there a difference between what is on your application and what you told me today?”

“Please explain to me . . .”

“Who completed this form?”

3.5 Step Five: Assess the Reasonableness of the Explanation

To determine if an explanation is reasonable, you should apply the same factors that are used to make initial credibility determinations. Ask yourself whether the explanation is detailed, consistent, and/or plausible. If it is, then the explanation is reasonable and the applicant is credible on that point. If the explanation is vague or inconsistent with another part of the record or the applicant’s testimony, or implausible in light of logic or country conditions, then it is not reasonable and a negative credibility determination is justified.

Examples

Examples of reasonable explanations, depending on the context, include:

- I am sorry, my memory is poor and I misspoke earlier.
- The date on the application is the date using the calendar from my home country and is different from the one used in the United States.
- When the police came to my house the first time, they did not arrest me, that is why I told you I have only been arrested once.

4 ~~WHAT~~ MAY NOT BE CONSIDERED IN MAKING A CREDIBILITY DETERMINATION

There are a number of factors that should not be considered when making a credibility determination. The factors listed below are some of those; this is not an exhaustive list. Some of the following factors are always inappropriate to consider in evaluating credibility because they do not shed light on whether or not an applicant is credible. Other factors discussed below may be considered with caution or may lead you to test the applicant’s credibility further during the interview. None of the factors, however, can form the sole basis for finding that a claim is not credible.

4.1 An Officer's Views of a Country or Situation

You may have lived in or traveled in a particular country, or you may have formed opinions about a country based on the experiences of friends or associates. Although knowledge gained from such experiences or contacts may be useful in developing lines of questioning during the interview or when gathering additional reliable COI, such personal knowledge is not evidence and your decision cannot be based in any way on such personal opinions and views.

4.2 An Officer's Moral Judgment

Your moral judgment of an applicant's behavior is irrelevant to a determination of whether or not events occurred as the applicant described. Moral judgments can never form the basis for a credibility determination. For example, in unusually strong language, the Ninth Circuit found it was inappropriate for the immigration judge to find that an applicant was not credible because he failed to marry the mother of his two children.²⁷

4.3 An Officer's Personal Opinion about How an Individual Would Act

Your opinion about how an individual would act in a given situation or that an applicant has not acted rationally is irrelevant to a determination of whether or not events occurred as the applicant described. The comparison of how an applicant acted in a given situation to how the officer believes a "rational person" would act in such a situation is not a reliable indicator of credibility. What is rational to one person is not necessarily rational to another person, particularly if the two are from different backgrounds or cultures. Additionally, people do not always act rationally. For example, it would be inappropriate to find an applicant not credible because the officer believes that no rational woman would place herself at risk by publicly distributing anti-government pamphlets in a country where dissent is not tolerated and women do not take part in political life. If the facts of the case lead the officer to believe that the applicant acted in a manner that was unusual in light of the applicant's country and background, it is appropriate to ask the applicant about his or her behavior, in a non-adversarial, nonjudgmental manner, or to test credibility by asking for additional detail. For example: "I understand that it must have been dangerous for you to distribute the pamphlets. What led you to take this risk?"

4.4 Use of an Attorney

The fact that the applicant files an application prepared by an attorney or consults with an attorney before making a statement does not indicate whether the application or statement is true or not. An applicant may be afraid to reveal information to a government official, or may not know which information is important to reveal, until consultation with an attorney.

²⁷ Damaize-Job v. INS, 787 F.2d 1332, 1337 (9th Cir. 1986).

However, if a statement made after receiving advice from an attorney contradicts an earlier statement made by the applicant, then you should elicit further information to determine whether there is a reasonable explanation for the change in testimony. Such inconsistencies and explanations should be considered in the same manner as any other inconsistencies and explanations that may arise in a case.

4.5 Self-Serving Statements

"Self-serving" refers only to statements that serve no purpose and provide no evidence, such as the statement, "I never tell lies." You may disregard self-serving statements.

An applicant's own statement in support of his or her claim is generally not a self-serving statement and you must consider it. Almost all the statements an applicant makes at the interview are made in an attempt to obtain a benefit. The fact that a supporting statement is made by the person seeking the benefit is not an indication that the statement is not relevant, reliable or credible.

4.6 Delay in Filing the Claim

The fact that an applicant did not apply for asylum or refugee status as soon as possible does not mean that the applicant fabricated the claim. A genuine refugee may wait until he or she is in a safe country before making a claim, may be unaware of his or her eligibility for refugee status, and /or may be unaware of the procedures for obtaining refugee status. If it is relevant to the claim, it is important to ask why the applicant delayed in filing and assess the applicant's response.

4.7 Contact—Or Lack of Contact—with U.S. Embassy

The fact that an asylum or refugee applicant did not approach the U.S. Embassy in his or her home country is not necessarily relevant to a determination of whether or not events occurred as the applicant described. An applicant may have felt unsafe waiting in the country for the application to be processed, or may have believed that applying for a visa would have placed him or her at further risk. On the other hand, the applicant's ability to obtain a visa may present a legitimate line of questioning during the interview. However, unless that part of the testimony is materially inconsistent with the applicant's claim, it cannot form the basis for a negative credibility finding.

(Note: U.S. Embassies do not have authority to adjudicate claims for refugee or asylum status. They may refer cases to USCIS to make a refugee status determination, but they rarely do so.)

4.8 Failure to Apply for Refugee Status in a Third Country

The fact that an asylum or refugee applicant failed to apply for refugee status in a third country does not mean that the applicant lacks credibility. There may be many reasons why an applicant who fears persecution in his or her home country did not apply for protection in a third country, including economic, political, or family reasons. In such circumstances, it is important to ask the applicant why he or she did not apply in the third country and assess his or her answer.

4.9 Similar Claims

The fact that the applicant's claim is similar to other claims is not in itself determinative of credibility, because there are reasons that claims may be similar that are unrelated to the applicant's credibility. For example, an applicant's claim may be similar to other applicants' claims because there is a pattern of persecution in the applicant's country, resulting in many similar claims. Or, the applicant may have a genuine claim, but several other applicants copied it and filed their own claims based on the same or similar facts.

However, unrelated claims may also be similar because the applicants went to the same source for a fabricated claim. You may come across some "boilerplate" applications that are identical (word for word) or unusually similar in content. The fact that one application is identical to another may not in itself form the basis for an adverse credibility determination but may alert the officer to look particularly closely at the credibility of the claim. You must provide the applicant with an opportunity to present the full claim and explain any discrepancies between the testimony and the application in order to determine whether the applicant's claim is credible.

The following are two types of "boilerplates" you may encounter in the asylum or refugee context:

Intra-proceeding similarities

In Surinder Singh v. BIA, the Second Circuit upheld an IJ's adverse credibility finding based, in part, on "the nearly identical language in the written affidavits allegedly provided by different people in India in support of Singh's applications."²⁸ Citing Singh in a later decision the Court stated, "...our case law on intra-proceeding similarities has firmly embraced the commonsensical notion that striking similarities between affidavits are an indication that the statements are 'canned.'"²⁹

²⁸ Surinder Singh v. BIA, 438 F.3d 145, 148 (2d Cir. 2006).

²⁹ Mei Chai Ye v. USDOJ, 489 F.3d 517, 524-26 (2d Cir. 2007) ("We have repeatedly allowed IJs to take into account such "intra-proceeding" similarities because, in most cases, it is reasonable and unproblematic for an IJ to infer that an applicant who herself submits the strikingly similar documents is the common source of those suspicious similarities").

If you encounter a case where affidavits of nearly identical language are submitted in support of a claim, you should closely question the applicant about the preparation of the affidavits: who prepared them, if not known; under what circumstances; and how the people who signed the affidavits had knowledge of the content. The officer should point out to the applicant the extreme similarity in the documents and provide the applicant an opportunity to explain why they are so similar. Such questioning will inform you about the evidentiary weight to give to the affidavits and their impact on the overall credibility determination.

In refugee processing, it is unlikely that the applicant would submit an affidavit from a witness. Applicants' statements are taken by UNHCR and/or the RSCs and the applicants, except in exceedingly unusual circumstances, do not have assistance of counsel or others outside the program to aid in their case preparation.

Inter-proceeding similarities

The Second Circuit upheld an IJ's adverse credibility finding based on a comparison of striking similarities found in affidavits that were submitted separately in unrelated asylum applications.³⁰

The court warned of the problems that such findings could entail, identifying four possible explanations for such similarities:³¹

- Both applicants may have inserted truthful information into a standardized template
- Different applicants may have employed the same preparer who wrote up both stories in their own rigid style
- The other applicant may have plagiarized the truthful statements of the applicant
- The similarities resulted from inaccurate or formulaic translations

The Court noted, favorably, the way the proceedings were handled, with the IJ "...meticulously follow[ing] certain procedural safeguards which, taken together, sufficiently addressed the dangers inherent in relying on inter-proceeding similarities."³² The Court then went on to describe the procedural safeguards in detail. The court found that, in relying on inter-proceeding similarities, a tricr of fact should:

1. Carefully identify the similarities

³⁰ Mei Chai Ye v. USDOJ, 489 F.3d 517 (2d Cir. 2007).

³¹ Id. at 524.

³² Id.

2. Consider the number and nature of the similarities to determine if,
 - a. there is any likelihood that they are mere coincidence, or;
 - b. it is plausible that different asylum applicants inserted truthful information into a standardized template or, for illiteracy reasons, conveyed it to a scrivener tied to an unchanging style, or;
3. the similarities are due to a common translator converting valid accounts into similar stories, or
 - a. the applicant was an innocent victim of plagiarism.
4. Rigorously comply with procedural safeguards concerning notice,³³ by allowing the applicant meaningful opportunity
 - a. to explain or contest the similarities;
 - b. to investigate the possibility that her affidavit might somehow have been plagiarized; or
 - c. to consider whether the seemingly similar affidavits might merely have been translated or recorded inaccurately or formulaically.³⁴

In the refugee context, there are times when refugees may have similar claims, which may or may not give rise to a credibility concern. Refugees often have spent many years living in either camps or urban settings with other refugees from their country and may have heard that some stories ‘work’ for getting their cases approved. It does not mean, however, that the person sitting in front of you did not experience the claimed harm; you will need to elicit testimony to determine whether the applicant is credible.

Considerations

³³ Id. at 525 n.5 (explaining in greater detail the protections afforded by the notice requirements).

³⁴ Id. at 526, 527 n.9 (stating that “[t]here is nothing novel about our insisting on the application of heightened procedural protections to a context in which they are necessary to safeguard the integrity of the agency’s fact-finding function.”)

Confronting an applicant about significant similarities between the applicant's and others' applications raises a number of issues that must be carefully handled, in close coordination with others in your chain of command, including supervisors, FDNS, and, in the overseas refugee processing context, the Refugee Affairs Division's Security Vetting and Program Integrity Branch.

First, the confidentiality of the applicant must not be violated. The Court in *Mei Chai Ye*³⁵ made clear that an applicant must be given meaningful notice of the similarities and full opportunity to offer an explanation of those similarities before an adverse credibility determination may be based on boilerplate considerations. This may require you to allow an applicant to examine portions of the other similar applications, which raises confidentiality issues. The confidentiality issues may be addressed through proper redaction of identifying information.

Second, confronting an applicant with the fact that other significantly similar applications have been submitted by other applicants could possibly jeopardize an on-going fraud investigation. In some cases, most often in the asylum context, DHS may be investigating a particular "boilerplate preparer" for prosecution. Thus, it is important that you first consult with your supervisor and the FDNS officer assigned to your office to ensure that the any ongoing investigation is not jeopardized.

Third, an applicant who does not speak English may submit an application in English that is very similar to other applications filed by other applicants, yet insist that the applicant completed it himself or herself. It would not be appropriate to base an adverse credibility solely on lack of truthfulness about the preparation of an application.³⁶ However, such lack of candor may be appropriate to consider along with other relevant factors when evaluating credibility. While being untruthful about the identity of the person who prepared an application is not material to the actual claim, it may be another relevant factor to consider in the totality of circumstances. Being truthful about the preparation of an application is relevant to the applicant's knowledge of its contents and thus relevant to the overall credibility of the claim.

4.10 Claims That Differ

You may become familiar with certain types of claims originating from a particular country. However, the fact that a given claim may be different from other claims made by refugee applicants from the same country is not necessarily in itself determinative of credibility. Human behavior is rarely consistent, and as a result, events in any given country cannot be expected to always be consistent.

³⁵ Mei Chai Ye v. USDOJ, 489 F.3d 517, 524-26 (2d Cir. 2007).

³⁶ In the overseas refugee processing context, Resettlement Support Center staff who are under cooperative agreement with the Department of State assist the applicant with filling out application forms; as such, this does not apply to refugee applicants.

4.11 COI Fails To Corroborate Claim

The fact that country condition information does not corroborate the applicant's claim is not necessarily determinative of credibility. In some instances, you may be the first to learn about a particular instance of human rights abuses or other developments in another country. In some refugee-producing countries, freedom of expression and association is non-existent, and human rights monitors are prevented from visiting the country or areas of unrest. This makes it difficult for organizations that document human rights abuses to obtain up-to-date information. Even where human rights monitors have access to a country, they are not able to document every human rights abuse that occurs.

The instance in which COI does not corroborate the claim should not be confused with the instance in which COI is clearly and directly inconsistent with the claim. Where country conditions do not corroborate the claim, the country conditions simply fail to address or shed light on the applicant's situation. Where COI is clearly and directly inconsistent with the claim, COI might show the claim is not plausible. In some instances, the applicant's details may be inconsistent with COI because the applicant experienced or witnessed the event differently.

4.12 Ineligibility for Benefit

The fact that the applicant does not qualify for the benefit sought is not relevant to the credibility determination. For example, it is possible that an applicant for refugee status is truly and honestly afraid of future harm, but his or her fears are not objectively reasonable based on country information. Therefore, the applicant's testimony may be credible, but his or her fears are not well-founded.

5 ADDRESSING CREDIBILITY AT THE INTERVIEW

The interview is the most important tool that you have in assessing credibility. Most of the direct evidence that you develop for each case will come during the interview. The most important thing to keep in mind during the interview is that it is your responsibility to elicit as much relevant information as you can.

5.1 Probing Credibility

In general, the following techniques should aid you in evaluating the credibility of applicants. Some of the techniques discussed below apply specifically to cases in which fraud is suspected.

5.1.1 Elicit general biographical information about the applicant at the beginning of the interview to establish a baseline

Such information should include where the applicant lived, with whom he or she lived, whether the applicant continued living at the same residence until departure from his or her country, where the applicant worked, when the applicant stopped working, and information about the applicant's schooling. General biographical information, contained in the application, provides a general picture of the applicant's life. You may then take the applicant's background into account when evaluating the type of information you expect the applicant to be able to provide.

Additionally, applicants who have fabricated asylum or refugee claims sometimes are not prepared for all of the basic background information elicited at the beginning of the interview and therefore may present this type of evidence truthfully. If an applicant has fabricated a claim, it may conflict with this general baseline biographic information, which may alert you that the claim is not genuine.

5.1.2 Listen carefully to what the applicant says

Only by listening carefully to the applicant's testimony can you determine whether it is consistent. You should also remain attentive to avoid missing information. If you miss information, you may be unclear about whether information related later in the interview is consistent with information related previously.

5.1.3 Elicit as much detail as possible

If an applicant is not credible, he or she may not be able to provide details about the alleged events that form the basis of the asylum or refugee claim. For example, if the applicant claimed to have been a political leader who actively campaigned by giving speeches at rallies, you should consider eliciting information about the party. If the applicant cannot describe basic information about the party (such as its goals or structure), the credibility regarding the extent of his participation in the party is put into question. Furthermore, if an applicant is fabricating a story, asking the applicant to provide greater detail can result in a higher probability of an inconsistency being discovered.

5.1.4 When appropriate, ask questions out of chronological order

If an applicant is not telling the truth, he or she may have memorized the story in sequence. If you ask questions so that the applicant is required to describe events out of chronological order, the applicant may not be able to relate the story accurately. Caution must be exercised, however, because a truthful applicant who is nervous, forgetful, or suffering from the effects of trauma might also become confused when having to explain events out of order. It is also helpful to elicit general baseline biographic information in chronological order, as explained above, before eliciting information about the claim for asylum or refugee status. An applicant who is fabricating a claim may not be able to fit the claim in the chronology of the biographical information. When engaging in this practice, you must take particular care not to create confusion through unclear questioning; instead ensure that the applicant is aware of the precise time period or event about which you are questioning him or her.

5.1.5 When appropriate, ask the applicant to explain certain events a second time

If the applicant is not being truthful, he or she may relate events differently the second time. You must exercise caution in assessing whether the two answers provided are actually inconsistent or whether the applicant is just providing additional detail that was not initially requested.

5.1.6 Develop a firm understanding of any discrepancy before asking the applicant to explain

Before asking about a discrepancy, it may prove helpful to rephrase questions or repeat back to the applicant what the applicant said to be sure that the meaning is clear. Eliciting additional information surrounding an apparent discrepancy may clarify facts or create a stronger record of the discrepancy. The point is not to trap an honest applicant in a lie, but rather to carefully develop a record of relevant information that you will use to evaluate the applicant's eligibility. Therefore, when you notice one or more inconsistencies, it is important to have a firm understanding of those discrepancies before asking the applicant to explain them.

5.1.7 Take careful notes

Evidence of the reasons for a negative credibility finding must be documented in the interview notes. For asylum or refugee interviews, you must record all of your questions and the applicant's answers in a modified Q&A format (see RAIO Training module, Interviewing – Note Taking). If you have recorded the applicant's statements carefully, you will be able to refer to specific testimony when questioning the applicant about any inconsistencies. This can help avoid confusion and may prevent disputes about what the applicant did or did not say earlier in the interview. Finally, if there is a request for review of the decision, the reviewer must have a clear record in order to understand whether the credibility determination was made correctly.

5.1.8 Closely review documents submitted by the applicant

You should carefully examine the contents of any documents the applicant submits when he or she is still in your office, paying particular attention to names and dates. After the applicant has presented his or her claim, you should compare it with the information in the documents and ask the applicant about any discrepancies. It is often difficult to determine whether documents issued in another country are genuine. If they are not genuine, or if the applicant's claim is fabricated, then the information contained in the documents may not match the details of the applicant's claim or biographical data.

However, you should keep in mind that sometimes applicants obtain false documents in order to leave their country to escape harm. Also, in some countries, it is easier for an individual to pay to get fraudulent civil documents than it is to get genuine documents. Possession of false documents, in itself, may not be a sufficient basis to make a negative credibility finding or to find an applicant ineligible for the benefit sought. In the asylum and refugee context, you must determine whether any discrepancies between documents and the applicant's testimony present inconsistencies that are material to the applicant's claim. When processing asylee/refugee following-to-join cases or family-based immigrant petitions, you may issue a request for evidence and suggest DNA testing when fraudulent documents are submitted to establish a parent-child relationship.

5.1.9 Provide the applicant an opportunity to address perceived credibility flaws

Raising a concern regarding a discrepancy does not always have to happen immediately. Sometimes the issue will resolve itself as the claim is developed. Raising each inconsistency immediately can stifle the flow of the interview and the applicant's train of thought. It may confuse the applicant, resulting in the appearance of a credibility issue when in fact none might exist. This could also make you appear skeptical or lacking in neutrality. You should find a way to make note of discrepancies during the interview. Later, at an appropriate time before the close of the interview, you should review all of the discrepancies noted and make sure they have been resolved. See RAIO Training module, Interviewing – Eliciting Testimony.

As noted above, you must provide the applicant an opportunity during the interview to explain any inconsistency, implausibility, or lack of detail that you discover. The applicant may have a legitimate reason for having related testimony that appears to contain an inconsistency, or there may have been a misunderstanding between you and the applicant. Similarly, there may be a reasonable explanation for a discrepancy or inconsistency between information on the application and the applicant's oral testimony. On the other hand, if the applicant does not offer a reasonable explanation after being given an opportunity to do so, you may make a negative credibility determination.

It is incumbent on you to have sufficiently reviewed the materials in the case file prior to the interview to be able to identify any inconsistencies in the course of the interview and confront the applicant with them at the time of the interview. Nonetheless, there may be some rare situations (for example when submitted documents are later discovered to be fraudulent) in which you discover a discrepancy or misrepresentation only after the interview. If the inconsistency is material and affects the outcome of the refugee or asylum case, every effort should be made to conduct a second interview. In some cases, a second interview may not be possible. In this type of situation, you should request guidance from his or her immediate supervisor or team leader.

While current case law is silent on how to determine whether an explanation is reasonable, a technique you can employ to assist you in making such determinations is to apply the same factors that are used to make the initial credibility determination. Ask yourself whether the explanation is detailed, consistent, and plausible. If it is, then the explanation is reasonable and the applicant is credible on this point. If the explanation is vague, inconsistent with another part of the record or the applicant's testimony, or implausible in light of logic or country conditions, then it may not be reasonable and a negative credibility determination may be justified. In analyzing whether an explanation for an inconsistency is reasonable, you must be able to articulate specific and cogent reasons. You must also take into account the explanations provided by the applicant.

5.1.10 Remaining composed and professional, even if fraud is suspected

You should never argue with applicants. When you ask an applicant to explain the reasons for apparent inconsistencies, implausible statements, or lack of detail, the applicant may become defensive, evasive, and/or argumentative. However, you must remain professional at all times and not argue with the applicant or confront the applicant in a manner or tone that puts an applicant on the defensive. One effective way of doing this is to lead off confronting the applicant about an inconsistency by saying, "Help me understand..." In a non-adversarial manner, you should simply ask the applicant to explain the inconsistency, ask for further clarification if necessary, and write the applicant's explanation in the interview notes.

Similarly, you should remain composed and you must avoid unprofessional body language. If you do not believe an applicant, you should not use body language to convey your disbelief. For example, you should not tap the desk impatiently, ask a rapid series of leading questions, shake your head or laugh in disbelief, or roll your eyes.

6 SPLIT CREDIBILITY FINDING

In some cases, you may determine that part of the applicant's testimony is not credible, but that another part is credible. You should identify those parts of the testimony that were found not credible, explain why they were found not credible, and state whether they are relevant to the applicant's claim. You should also identify those parts of the claim that were deemed credible. In some instances, unexplained credibility concerns related to part of the applicant's testimony can be a basis for finding that the entire testimony is not credible.

Examples

- ~~X~~ • In a case involving a Christian from Pakistan, the IJ found credible the testimony that the petitioner was a Christian, but found not credible his account of incidents he claimed to have suffered in Pakistan on account of his religion. The IJ denied based on the adverse credibility finding. The petitioner filed a motion to reopen based on updated country reports that purportedly detailed increasingly harsh conditions for Christians in Pakistan. The BIA denied the motion on the ground that the proffered evidence did not address the IJ's original adverse credibility finding against the petitioner. The Second Circuit found that the new evidence may establish a well-founded fear despite the negative credibility finding on the past persecution claim. The court did not analyze the basis for the adverse credibility finding, only whether that testimony "necessarily infects related but essentially freestanding claims made by the same petitioner."³⁷ The court held that "an applicant may prevail on a theory of future persecution despite an IJ's adverse credibility finding as to past persecution, so long as the factual predicate of the applicant's claim of future persecution is independent of the testimony that the IJ found not to be credible."³⁸
- Likewise, in a case involving an Ethiopian government crackdown on opposition sympathizers, the Seventh Circuit held that the applicant's claim of future persecution was "distinct from her evidence of past persecution concerning her detention and beating for participating in the AAPO."³⁹ According to the court, "[g]iven these distinct facts, the prior adverse finding need not undermine [the applicant's] theory of future persecution."⁴⁰
 - The Ninth Circuit has refused to rely on testimony regarding a subjective fear of future persecution because of an adverse credibility determination of the applicant's past persecution claim. The court held, "[w]e cannot rely on [the applicant's] testimony as establishing the subjective element [of the well-founded fear test], [] because the IJ and the BIA, with substantial basis in the record, found that the 'applicant's testimony [was] not worthy of credence.'"⁴¹ The court, however, found the applicant's fear of future persecution to be genuine because of the substantial documentary evidence providing strong support for the objective component of the applicant's well-founded fear claim.⁴²

³⁷ Paul v. Gonzales, 444 F.3d 148, 154 (2d Cir. 2006).

³⁸ Id.

³⁹ Gebreeesus v. Gonzales, 482 F.3d 952, 955 (7th Cir. 2007).

⁴⁰ Id.

⁴¹ Al-Harbi v. INS, 242 F.3d 882, 890 (9th Cir. 2001).

⁴² Id.

- A negative credibility determination with respect to a future persecution claim will not per se defeat an asylum claim where there is evidence of past persecution. In a Chinese forced sterilization case, the Fourth Circuit held that even though an applicant failed to credibly demonstrate a well-founded fear of future persecution, the IJ erred in failing to consider the applicant's claim of past persecution based on his wife's forced abortion.⁴³

7 TOTALITY OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES (综合考虑)

You must base your credibility determination on the totality of the circumstances in the claim, taking into account any cross-cultural misunderstandings that may have arisen, translation or language difficulties, trauma the applicant has suffered, the applicant's background, your time constraints and the difficulty in evaluating the behavior of a stranger. During your determination, you have a duty to remain neutral and unbiased.

7.1 Cross Cultural Misunderstandings⁴⁴

7.1.1 Body language

The meaning of body language varies from culture to culture. These differences can cause the applicant, interpreter, and you to misconstrue the non-verbal signals of one another.

Examples

- While indicating affirmation in the United States, nodding the head indicates negation in some other cultures. If you are insensitive to cultural differences, you might erroneously suspect that an applicant is lying when he verbally answers, "No," but at the same time nods his head.
- Eye contact is another form of body language that has different meanings in different cultures. An applicant may not maintain eye contact with you out of deference to or respect for a person in authority. You generally should not view this as a sign of evasiveness.

7.1.2 Customs

A cultural faux pas may distract you or the applicant, resulting in responses or non-verbal signals that might be misconstrued as signs of untruthfulness.

⁴³ Lin-Jian v. Gonzales, 489 F.3d 182, 191-92 (4th Cir. 2007).

⁴⁴ See RAIO Module, Cross-Cultural Communication.

In some cases, the applicant and interpreter may not speak the same first language, or may speak distinctly different dialects of the same language. Using a language or dialect that one or both do not speak or understand fully will cause problems in the interpretation.⁴⁷

Furthermore, the interpreter's and applicant's inexperience with interpretation and the interview process can create an obstacle to good communication. The applicant may speak too rapidly or explain too much at once, making it difficult for all information to be interpreted accurately. Likewise, an officer may ask several questions at once, speak too quickly or give a long explanation. These factors may lead to misunderstandings that, if unresolved, can adversely affect the credibility evaluation.

Examples

- An immigration judge ruled that an applicant was not credible due to inconsistencies in his testimony and failure to establish his identity. The Sixth Circuit ruled that the applicant was denied a fair hearing because the interpreter was incompetent. Although the interpreter was fluent in English and Fulani (the applicant's first language), he spoke a different dialect of Fulani than the applicant. An examination of the record indicated several instances of misunderstanding between the applicant and the interpreter.⁴⁸
- An immigration judge found that a Guatemalan applicant was not credible. The U.S. Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, found that the record indicated that the K'iche' (Quiché)-speaking applicant did not understand some of the questions being interpreted for him. Although the interpreter was interpreting in K'iche', the applicant's answers to the IJ's questions indicated a lack of understanding. The interpretation problem was exacerbated by the aggressive questions from the IJ.⁴⁹
- A Haitian applicant whose application stated that she lived with her father, was asked where she lived after her father was killed. She replied that she stayed with her relatives in Cap-Haitien. In Haitian Creole, there is one word that means both 'parent' and 'relative'—'paran.' The interpreter, however, interpreted the word as 'parents,' causing the officer to doubt the applicant's veracity.
- A Spanish-speaking applicant was asked why she did not immediately flee her country after being threatened. She replied that she could not, using the word 需要马上离开 after threat .

⁴⁷ See Amadou v. INS, 226 F.3d 724, 725 (6th Cir. 2000).

⁴⁸ Id.

⁴⁹ Perez-Lastor v. INS, 208 F.3d 773, 778-779 (9th Cir. 2000).

allegedly false newspaper articles.

7.4 Personal Background of the Applicant⁵⁸

The level of education or sophistication of an applicant may affect his or her ability to articulate a claim. If you perceive that the applicant is having difficulty articulating a claim, you should review the baseline you established early in the interview to ensure that that you are asking questions appropriate to the applicant's level of involvement, age, history of trauma, or other element and inquire further into the applicant's background to determine if there are reasons, other than lack of credibility, that explain the applicant's inability to express the claim. A close review of the biographical data in the application may give you information that indicates the applicant's level of sophistication.

In questioning an asylum or refugee applicant whose claim is based on religion or membership in an organization, it is important to establish at what level the applicant participated. A mere member or supporter cannot be expected to have the same knowledge as a leader or intellectual in a movement. A clear distinction must be made between adherents and experts.⁵⁹

7.5 Time Constraints

Time pressures are a reality for you. However, attempting inappropriately to rush an interview may cause you to lose focus, become impatient, and miss information related by the applicant. This could lead you to believe erroneously that the applicant did not provide enough detail, that there were gaps in the applicant's testimony, or that the testimony was internally inconsistent. Some interviews may simply take longer to conduct in order to evaluate credibility accurately. You should follow your division's procedures in your interview.

7.6 Difficulty in Evaluating the Behavior of a Stranger

Generally, you will not have previously encountered the applicants you interview. First impressions of an applicant may be unreliable. Care should be taken to avoid misinterpreting the applicant's actions and words.

For example, an applicant's reticence and confusion in answering questions may indicate that the applicant is shy, did not understand your question, or fears authority figures, ⁵⁸ See RAIO Module, Cross-Cultural Communication.

⁵⁹ Rizal v. Gonzales, 442 F.3d 84, 90 (2d Cir. 2006); Cosa v. Mukasey, 543 F.3d 1066, 1070 (9th Cir. 2008) (“Remarkably, the IJ set up a Bible quiz and an academic trivia contest as the foundation for the adverse credibility finding. Cosa claimed no expertise in Bible study or passages nor did she claim to have an intellectual’s understanding of Millenism”).

4. Temporarily Set aside Decision Making⁶⁰

8.1 Except When / Especially When

This is a particularly useful tool when you are basing your decision in whole, or in part, on a generalization. If you are trying to explain your reasons for an adverse credibility determination and you find yourself saying to yourself, "Everybody knows..." you are probably engaging in a generalization of some sort. You need to examine that generalization, try to test it, and, if necessary, narrow it.

You test a generalization in three stages:

- Articulate your generalization.
- Add "except when" and brainstorm as many different circumstances as you can.
- Add "especially when" and brainstorm as many different circumstances as you can.⁶¹

Examples

- A generalization that is used quite often in credibility determinations is falsus in uno falsus in omnibus, or false in one thing, false in all things. Stated in plain English, this generalization means: If an applicant has lied about one thing, it is probable that he or she is lying about everything. Ask yourself: How true is this generalization? Post-REAL ID Act, several circuit courts have addressed the issue of falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. The First Circuit has applied this concept and noted, in dicta, that the REAL ID Act endorses it.⁶² The Seventh Circuit has rejected the application of this concept, stating:

The immigration judge failed to distinguish between material lies, on the one hand, and innocent mistakes, trivial inconsistencies, and harmless exaggerations, on the other hand. In effect, he applied the discredited doctrine of falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus (false in one thing, false in all things), which Wigmore called "primitive psychology," and in a characterization that we endorsed, an "absolutely false maxim of life."⁶³

⁶⁰ This is generally not an option in refugee processing, and is subject to case processing time limitations within other divisions.

⁶¹ D. Binder & P. Bergman, Fact Investigation: From Hypothesis To Proof (West Pub., 1984).

⁶² Castañeda-Castillo v. Gonzales, 488 F.3d 17, 23 n.6 (1st Cir.2007).

⁶³ Kadia v Gonzales, 501 F.3d 817, 821 (7th Cir. 2007) (citations omitted).

The Second Circuit has also addressed the issue of falsus in uno, but has addressed it using the “Except When/Especially When” analysis. The Second Circuit applied the concept, affirming the immigration judge’s adverse credibility determination based on the applicant’s submission of a single fraudulent document to prove the nexus element of his claim. In affirming the IJ decision the court looked more closely at the generalization, in order to conform to circuit precedents and identified five exceptions to the general rule, none of which applied in the case before it.⁶⁴ The five situations where falsus in uno will generally not apply, as identified by the Second Circuit are as follows:

- A finding that an applicant submitted false evidence does not excuse the assessment of evidence that is independently corroborated.⁶⁵
- The presentation of fraudulent documents that were created to escape persecution may actually tend to support an individual’s application.⁶⁶
- False evidence that is wholly ancillary to the alien’s claim may, in some circumstances, be insufficient by itself to warrant a conclusion that the entirety of the alien’s uncorroborated material evidence is also false.⁶⁷
- A false statement made during an airport interview, depending on the circumstances, may not be a sufficient ground for invoking falsus in uno. Aliens may “not be entirely forthcoming” during the initial interview due to their perception that it is “coercive” or “threatening,” particularly aliens who may have a well-founded fear of government authorities in general.⁶⁸
- An alien’s submission of documentary evidence that the alien does not know, and has no reason to know, is inauthentic, is no basis for falsus in uno.

The court engaged in a process similar to “Except When/Especially When” and in doing so crafted a rule that clearly limits the application of the general rule. The “Except When” analysis will help you to find the limits of a generalization and you can use the “Especially When” analysis to help narrow an overly broad generalization.

⁶⁴ Siewe v. Gonzales, 480 F.3d 160, 170 (2d Cir. 2007).

⁶⁵ Poradisova v. Gonzales, 420 F.3d 70, 77 (2d Cir. 2005).

⁶⁶ Lin v. Gonzales, 445 F.3d 127, 132-33 (2d Cir. 2006).

⁶⁷ Zhong v. USDOJ, 461 F.3d 101, 123 (2d Cir. 2006).

⁶⁸ Guan v. Gonzales, 432 F.3d 391, 396 (2d Cir. 2005).

systematic skepticism, subjecting everything to question and accepting nothing on its own. Most people, even those who tend to be believers, are comfortable with critical thinking as an exercise in skepticism. It is harder to play “the believing game”⁷¹ in which you try to be as welcoming as possible to every fact the applicant asserts, actually trying to believe him or her. The purpose of methodological believing is to find the hidden virtues in the applicant’s claim—a mirror image of methodological doubting, where the goal is to discover the flaws. You should try to engage in both methods in order to evaluate a claim completely. It is important to know yourself and have some idea of where you tend to fall on the believing/doubting spectrum. If you tend to be a doubter, you should put more effort into methodological believing. If you tend to be closer to the believing end of the scale you should put more effort into methodological doubting.

~~8.4~~ Temporarily Set Aside Decision Making

If you feel distracted by a behavior or characteristic of the applicant or the applicant’s attorney, rather than allowing this immaterial or irrelevant factor to affect your decision-making, you might try this tool. Within reasonable limits, set aside the case and come back to it when the distracting characteristic has faded from your memory. Rely on your notes and reach your decision from the record before you. One BIA Member wrote that reviewing the written record in a case was a “substantial, and much underrated, advantage” that insulated the BIA from “the almost inevitable, and often distracting, frustrations and extraneous factors that could accompany such personal interaction . . .”⁷² Because RAIO officers work under significant time constraints that support the goals and integrity of our programs, setting aside a such a case must not interfere with the decision making timeframes established by your office. Speak with your supervisors so that you understand your office policy. This method is generally not available to Refugee Officers engaged in refugee processing overseas, unless they need further guidance from Headquarters.

9 CONCLUSION

Assessment of credibility is an evidentiary determination. There is no moral component to credibility; the issue is to determine what evidence is reliable enough on which to base your decision.

10 SUMMARY

⁷¹ Peter Elbow, The Believing Game and How to Make Conflicting Opinions More Fruitful http://scholarworks.umass.edu/context/peter_elbow/article/1001/type/native/viewcontent ⁷² Matter of A-S-, 21 I&N Dec. 1106, 1114 (BIA 1998)(Schmidt, dissenting).

A methodological approach to credibility breaks the evaluation of credibility down into three determinations.

- Internal consistency— whether the material facts are internally coherent and consistent with facts asserted by the applicant through his or her production of evidence
- External consistency— whether material facts are consistent with independent evidence such as COI or other sources that may be introduced by the applicant or you, the adjudicator
- Plausibility— whether the facts asserted by the applicant conform to the objective rules of reality

Credibility analyses should be based on factors such as consistency, detail, and plausibility. You may also consider, in the totality of the circumstances, other factors such as demeanor, candor, and responsiveness; inaccuracies or falsehoods; and any other relevant factor, but you should not base the credibility determination on these factors alone.

Credibility analyses should not be based on such factors as:

- Your moral judgment
- Your personal opinion about how an individual would act
- The fact that applicant's testimony supports his or her application.
- Delay in filing the claim
- Contact—or lack of contact—with the U.S. Embassy
- The fact that the applicant's story is similar to other claims
- The fact that the applicant's story differs from other claims
- The fact that COI fails to corroborate the claim
- The fact that a refugee or asylum applicant's fear does not appear to be well-founded

In the asylum and refugee context, the interview is the most important tool you have in assessing credibility. There are various techniques you can employ to test for credibility, but the most important technique is to conduct as thorough an interview as possible. The more detail you elicit, the better your credibility determination will be. During the interview you should address with the applicant any concerns you have about the applicant's credibility and give the applicant an adequate opportunity to respond to your concerns and attempt to answer them.

Credibility

SUPPLEMENT B – ASYLUM DIVISION

The following information is specific to the Asylum Division. Information in each text box contains division-specific procedures and guidelines related to the section from the Training Module referenced in the subheading of the supplement text box.

REQUIRED READING

1. RAIO Combined Training Course – Credibility Training Module
2. RAIO Combined Training Course – Evidence Training Module

ADDITIONAL RESOURCES

1. A listing of factors that an adjudicator may consider in making such a determination
2. The case that unlike prior holdings in some circuit courts, credibility law does not require that an adjudicator go to the heart of the claim

SUPPLEMENTS

ASM Supplement

No Presumption of Credibility

You must evaluate credibility in every case. The INA states, in pertinent part, that: "There is no presumption of credibility."⁷³ An applicant must establish his or her credibility as a component of meeting his or her burden of proof. The statute further requires that you consider "the totality of the circumstances, and all relevant factors,"⁷⁴ when making a credibility determination.

⁷³ INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii).

⁷⁴ Id.

ASM Supplement

REAL ID Act – “Totality of the Circumstances, and All Relevant Factors”

The REAL ID Act⁷⁵ added a section on credibility to the INA.⁷⁶ Congress' purpose in adding guidance concerning credibility and corroboration to the INA was to "...bring clarity and consistency to evidentiary determinations by codifying standards for determining the credibility of applicant testimony, and determining when corroborating evidence may be required."⁷⁷ The REAL ID Act took effect on May 11, 2005, and applies to applications for asylum filed on or after that date.⁷⁸

The major provisions of the REAL ID Act that pertain to credibility are as follows:

- The requirement that the adjudicator consider the “totality of the circumstances, and all relevant factors;”
- A listing of factors that an adjudicator may consider in making such a determination;
- Clarifying that unlike prior holdings in some circuit courts, credibility flaws do not need to “go to the heart of the claim.”⁷⁹

Because the REAL ID Act drew upon existing case law, pre-REAL ID Act case law is still relevant and will be cited to throughout this supplement.

Totality of the circumstances

The statute requires that you consider “the totality of the circumstances, and all relevant factors,” when making a credibility determination.

The U.S. Supreme Court has held that to properly consider the totality of the ⁷⁵ REAL ID Act § 101(a)(3)(B), codified at INA § 208(b)(1)(B).

⁷⁶ Guidance on credibility was added to both section 208 (INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii)) and to section 240 of the INA. The credibility amendment to section 240 applies to all applications for relief from removal before the IJ, which would include adjudication of waivers of inadmissibility.

⁷⁷ H.R. REP. NO. 109-72, at 165 (2005).

⁷⁸ MICHAEL JOHN GARCIA, MARGARET MIKYUNG LEE, AND TODD TATELMAN, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., RL32754, IMMIGRATION: ANALYSIS OF THE MAJOR PROVISIONS OF THE REAL ID ACT OF 2005 (2005).

⁷⁹ See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii).

circumstances, "the whole picture... must be taken into account."⁸⁰

To make an accurate credibility finding based upon the totality of the circumstances, you must elicit and analyze all relevant circumstances, including the individual circumstances of the applicant. When Congress enacted the statutory language covering asylum credibility determinations, it said the following:

[A]lthough [the statute] would allow an adjudicator to base an adverse credibility determination on any of the factors set forth therein, such a determination must be reasonable and take into consideration the individual circumstances of the specific witness and/or applicant. While the [adjudicator] is not required to state expressly that [he or she] has considered each factor in assessing credibility, Congress expects that the [adjudicator] will describe those factors that form the basis of the [decision].⁸¹

In discussing the proper approach to credibility determinations, the Third Circuit similarly stated the following:

[An adjudicator's] overall credibility determination does not necessarily rise or fall on each element of the witness's testimony, but rather is more properly decided on the cumulative effect of the entirety of all such elements. Where, as here, the asylum applicant has presented testimony that was for the most part quite detailed, internally consistent, materially in accord with his asylum application, and accepted by the [adjudicator], and there is supportive evidence of general country conditions and some corroborative documentation of the applicant's testimony, the [adjudicator] is not justified...in concluding that the applicant is not credible based on a few equivocal aspects not logically compelled by the record or by reason or common sense.⁸²

Consistent with this approach, the Ninth Circuit viewed the "totality of the circumstances" analysis as imposing the requirement that an Immigration Judge

⁸⁰ United States v. Cortez, 449 U.S. 411, 417 (1981) (using "totality of the circumstances" to determine whether there was sufficient cause for police to stop a person).

⁸¹ H.R. REP. NO. 109-72, at 167 (2005).

⁸² Jishiashvili v. U.S. Attorney General, 402 F.3d 386, 396 (3d Cir. 2005) (pre-REAL ID case that, while examining whether the testimony was "materially in accord with" the asylum application, took an approach of looking at the record as a whole, consistent with the REAL ID Act "totality of the circumstances and all relevant factors" approach).

"not cherry pick solely facts favoring an adverse credibility determination while ignoring facts that undermine that result."⁸³ In Shrestha v. Holder, the court underscored the need to present "a reasoned analysis of the evidence as a whole" and not selectively examine evidence in determining credibility.⁸⁴ The court concluded that the REAL ID Act imports a "rule of reason" into the assessments governing credibility determinations, in which the analysis must take into account the individual circumstances of the applicant and recognize that the "normal limits of human understanding and memory may make some inconsistencies or lack of recall present in any witness's case."⁸⁵

The Seventh Circuit also noted that inconsistencies must be considered "against the backdrop of the whole record, as one factor in the overall credibility determination."⁸⁶ In concluding that no such examination of the record had occurred in Hanaj v. Gonzales, the court stated, "[t]he IJ cannot selectively examine evidence in determining credibility, but must present a reasoned analysis of the evidence as a whole."⁸⁷

The Ninth Circuit indicated that a credibility determination fails to consider the totality of the circumstances and is in contravention of the REAL ID Act's text if it ignores the applicant's explanation for a perceived inconsistency and other relevant evidence on the record that sheds light on whether there is, in fact, an inconsistency.⁸⁸

Factors that an adjudicator may consider

The BIA has held that the factors listed in the REAL ID Act relevant to credibility determinations were chosen because they were "identified in case law" and therefore help provide a "uniform standard for credibility."⁸⁹ The relevant factors that an adjudicator may consider in making a credibility determination have been ⁸³ Shrestha v. Holder, 590 F.3d 1034, 1040 (9th Cir. 2010).

⁸⁴ Shrestha, 590 F.3d at 1040 (second emphasis added) (quoting Hanaj v. Gonzales, 446 F.3d 694, 700 (7th Cir. 2006)).

⁸⁵ Id. at 1044-1045.

⁸⁶ Hanaj v. Gonzalez, 446 F.3d 694, 700 (7th Cir. 2006) (quoting Balogun v. Ashcroft, 374 F.3d 492, 504 (7th Cir. 2004)).

⁸⁷ Id. at 700.

⁸⁸ Shrestha, 590 F.3d at 1044.

⁸⁹ Matter of J-Y-C-, 24 I&N Dec. 260, 262 (BIA 2007) (quoting H.R. REP. NO. 109-72, at 166-167 (2005)).

used in previous precedent decisions. The list included in the statute allows an adjudicator to consider any of the following in making a credibility determination. This list is not exhaustive:

- The consistency between the applicant's or witness's written and oral statement;
- The internal consistency of each such statement;
- The consistency of such statements with other evidence of record (including the reports of the Department of State on country conditions);
- The inherent plausibility⁹⁰ of the applicant's account;
- Any inaccuracies or falsehoods in such statements, without regard to whether an inconsistency, inaccuracy, or falsehood goes to the heart of the applicant's claim;
- Candor or responsiveness of the applicant;
- Demeanor;
- Any other "relevant" factor.⁹¹

While not specifically mentioned in the statute, a lack of detail is another factor that should be considered in making a credibility determination.⁹² In order to rely on "lack of detail" as a credibility factor, however, Asylum Officers must pose questions regarding the type of detail sought.

An omission may constitute an inconsistency that forms the basis for an adverse credibility finding. The Ninth Circuit has stated, however, that omissions are generally "less probative of credibility than inconsistencies created by direct contradictions in evidence and testimony."⁹³

⁹⁰ Determinations related to the implausibility of the applicant's statements must be based on evidence in the record and not the result of speculation, conjecture, or personal opinion. Elzour v. Ashcroft, 378 F.3d 1143, 1153 (10th Cir. 2004) (citations omitted).

⁹¹ INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii).

⁹² See Matter of Mogharabi, 19 I. & N. Dec. 439, 445 (BIA 1987) ("The alien's own testimony may in some cases be the only evidence available, and it can suffice where the testimony is believable, consistent, and sufficiently detailed to provide a plausible and coherent account of the basis for his fear."); see also Shrestha, 590 F.3d at 1040 ("Even though lack of detail is not expressly listed as a factor that may be considered, the pre-REAL ID Act practice of looking to the level of detail of the claimant's testimony to assess credibility, remains viable under the REAL ID Act as a relevant factor.").

⁹³ Lai v. Holder, 773 F.3d 966, 971 (9th Cir. 2014) (holding that two omissions from the asylum application regarding the detention of a fellow church member and the arrest of the applicant's wife, did not support an adverse credibility finding).

While the statute does explicitly identify demeanor and lack of candor as factors relevant to credibility determinations, note that there do not appear to be precedent decisions that support an adverse credibility determination based solely on demeanor or lack of candor. Rather, the courts have considered the cumulative effect of factors such as demeanor or lack of candor to strengthen adverse credibility determinations that also included inconsistencies, lack of plausibility, and/or lack of detail. Demeanor, candor and responsiveness are discussed further below.

When a factor may be inappropriate for the credibility determination is discussed in the “What May Not Be Considered in Making a Credibility Determination” section of the RAIO Training Module, Credibility.

Credibility flaws do not need to “go to the heart of the claim”

Under the INA as amended by the REAL ID Act, Asylum Officers may base a credibility determination on inconsistencies, including omissions, “without regard to whether an inconsistency, inaccuracy, or falsehood goes to the heart of the applicant’s claim,”⁹⁴ as long as they are relevant to the evaluation in light of the totality of the circumstances.⁹⁵

At least one commentator has indicated that the legislative history makes clear Congress did not intend to give adjudicators license to deny claims on credibility grounds based on flaws that bore no relevance to the claim.⁹⁶ Another commentator adds that even if an adjudicator considers using minor, tangential inconsistencies as a basis for an adverse credibility finding, the adjudicator is constrained by the “totality of circumstances” requirement and still must provide a specific and cogent reason for his or her action.⁹⁷ The commentator notes, “[o]n the face of a record which contains probative, corroborated, and consistent testimony, this may well become impossible to do. There are few satisfactory reasons capable of explaining ⁹⁴ INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii).

⁹⁵ See Chen v. US Att'y Gen., 463 F.3d 1228, 1231 (11th Cir. 2006); Xu Xia Lin v. Mukasey, 534 F.3d 162, 163 (2d Cir. 2008) (“[I]n evaluating an asylum applicant’s credibility, an IJ may rely on omissions and inconsistencies that do not directly relate to the applicant’s claim of persecution as long as the totality of the circumstances establish that the applicant is not credible.”).

⁹⁶ Marisa Silenzi Cianciarulo, Terrorism And Asylum Seekers: Why the REAL ID Act Is a False Promise, 43 HARV. J. ON LEGIS. 101, 135 (2006).

⁹⁷ James Feroli, Credibility, Burden Of Proof, and Corroboration under the REAL ID Act, 09-06 Immigr. Briefings 1, June 2009.

how a tangential inconsistency which has no link to the heart of the claim, can outweigh powerful and consistent evidence which does.”⁹⁸

In Xiu Xia Lin, the Second Circuit looked to the cumulative effect of “collateral or ancillary” inconsistencies and omissions in assessing the applicant’s credibility, stressing that the credibility factors must be evaluated in the totality of the circumstances.⁹⁹

The Fourth Circuit has also clarified the effects of the REAL ID Act on credibility determinations: “[a]s the provision’s language makes evident, an IJ’s adverse credibility determination need no longer rest solely on those matters fundamental to an alien’s claim for relief under the INA.”¹⁰⁰ The court emphasized, however, that this more “flexible” approach to credibility assessments “does not alter the underlying methodological requirement that an Immigration Judge provide ‘specific, cogent reason[s]’ for making an adverse credibility determination in a given case.”¹⁰¹

Make certain that whatever flaws you may identify are related to a matter at issue in the asylum adjudication and that your credibility determination is based on specific and cogent reasons, taking into account the totality of the circumstances. As noted above, the language of the REAL ID Act underscores the need for Asylum Officers to make explicit credibility determinations.¹⁰²

Definition of “relevant factors”

A factor is relevant if it is “logically connected and tending to prove or disprove a matter in issue.”¹⁰³ In the asylum context, relevant factors would, then, be any evidence that tends to prove or disprove such things as:

- Is the applicant who he or she purports to be (e.g., personal identity, nationality)?
- Has the applicant been harmed or does he or she fear harm?

⁹⁸ Id.

⁹⁹ Xiu Xia Lin v. Mukasey, 534 F.3d 162, 167 (2nd Cir. 2008) (citations omitted).

¹⁰⁰ Singh v. Holder, 699 F.3d 321, 329 (4th Cir. 2012).

¹⁰¹ Id.

¹⁰² See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii).

¹⁰³ Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014).

- Did the applicant file his or her asylum application within a year after entering the U.S.?
- Did the persecutor target the applicant on account of one of the protected characteristics?
- Was the applicant actually a member of the group for which he claims to have been targeted for persecution?
- Is the applicant subject to any mandatory bars?

The consistency or inconsistency of the applicant's statements - internally, between statements, or in comparison to other evidence in the record - may be relevant to the credibility determination. The relevance of any inconsistencies, inaccuracies and falsehoods will depend on their relation to the applicant's asylum claim. As noted by the Seventh Circuit, "inconsistencies that do not relate to the basis of the applicant's alleged fear of persecution are less probative than inconsistencies that do."¹⁰⁴

As previously noted, the INA as amended by the REAL ID Act allows reliance on inconsistencies, inaccuracies and falsehoods that do not go to "the heart of the applicant's claim," if they are "relevant" to the claim in light of the totality of the circumstances.¹⁰⁵ The Ninth Circuit also stated that "[u]nder the REAL ID Act, even minor inconsistencies that have a bearing on an [applicant's] veracity may constitute the basis for an adverse credibility determination."¹⁰⁶ It stressed, however, that determinations that rest largely on mischaracterizations of the applicant's testimony and credibility factors that are "manifestly trivial" have no bearing on the applicant's veracity.¹⁰⁷

Examples:

An applicant claims he was detained because he participated in a demonstration protesting election irregularities. He also claims to be an accountant. His participation in the demonstration is relevant because it has a ¹⁰⁴ Balogun v. Ashcroft, 374 F.3d 492, 504 (7th Cir. 2004).

¹⁰⁵ See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii).

¹⁰⁶ Ren v. Holder, 648 F.3d 1079, 1089 (9th Cir. 2011).

¹⁰⁷ See id. See also Ai Jun Zhi v. Holder, 751 F.3d 1088, 1092 (9th Cir. 2014) (concluding that "no reasonable fact-finder could have determined that the discrepancy in dates was anything but an utterly trivial discrepancy that under the totality of the circumstances [has] no bearing on [the applicant's] veracity.") (internal quotations omitted).

be established that they show the applicant's propensity to dissemble, such that the rest of the applicant's testimony is untrustworthy.¹¹¹

Misrepresentation as to identity

Identity as to citizenship or nationality or statelessness is a critical element of an asylum claim because asylum eligibility is based on harm or feared harm in the country of citizenship, nationality or, if stateless, country of last habitual residence.¹¹² Misrepresenting identity during an asylum adjudication in a way that misrepresents one's country of citizenship or nationality or that indicates one is stateless is relevant to the claim. Where the applicant cannot provide a reasonable explanation for this misrepresentation, this factor "significantly undermines" the applicant's overall credibility.¹¹³

Remember that an applicant's misrepresentation of identity outside the asylum application context (for example, to obtain travel documents to flee persecution) does not necessarily undermine the credibility of the claim but may in fact support it.

ASM Supplement

Demeanor, Candor, and Responsiveness

While these factors may be taken into account, they are often unreliable and should be used sparingly because of cross-cultural factors, effects of trauma, and the nature of non-adversarial interviews.

相关性 consistency @, details, plausibility
未完, 待续

¹¹¹ Balogun, 374 F.3d at 504; Toure, 400 F.3d at 48; Laurent v. Ashcroft, 359 F.3d 59, 64 (1st Cir. 2004); see also Pan v. Gonzalez, 489 F.3d 80, 86 (1st Cir. 2007).

¹¹² See INA §§ 208(b)(1)(B)(i); 101(a)(42)(A).

¹¹³ Matter of O-D-, 21 I&N Dec. 1079, 1083 (BIA 1998). An asylum applicant's presentation of an identification document found to be counterfeit by forensic experts, in the absence of an explanation or rebuttal, also indicates an overall lack of credibility regarding the entire claim.

inconsistencies and contradictions.

Compare two pre REAL ID Act decisions: Matter of A-S-, in which the BIA upheld an adverse credibility determination based partly on demeanor,¹¹⁷ and Matter of B-, in which the BIA reversed the IJ's decision because the credibility determination was based entirely on demeanor.¹¹⁸ In Matter of A-S-, the BIA explained that the "Immigration Judge's reasonable determination that the [applicant's] very halting and hesitant manner of testifying indicated deception [was] bolstered by the Immigration Judge's full range of specific and cogent credibility findings."¹¹⁹ The other credibility findings included vague testimony, lack of detail, and significant inconsistencies and omissions regarding the dates of key events in his claim.¹²⁰

In Matter of B-, the BIA found that the applicant's tendency while testifying to look at the wall behind the interpreter or down at the table, instead of at the IJ, was not necessarily an indication of deception.¹²¹ Instead, the applicant's behavior could indicate he was concentrating on the question that was being interpreted to him. The BIA explained it considered the demeanor issue "within the context of the whole record" and noted the record showed the applicant appeared to be listening carefully to the questions and asking for clarification of questions several times before responding.¹²² His testimony was also consistent throughout examination and cross-examination, and consistent with his application.¹²³

In sum, where there are no credibility flaws concerning consistency, detail and plausibility, demeanor alone will not suffice to support an adverse credibility determination.

2. Cultural assumptions

Cultural assumptions regarding what forms of body language suggest a lack of ¹¹⁷ Matter of A-S-, 21 I&N Dec. 1106, 1111 (BIA 1998).

¹¹⁸ Matter of B-, 21 I&N Dec. 66, 70 (BIA 1995).

¹¹⁹ Matter of A-S-, 21 I&N Dec. at 1111.

¹²⁰ Id. at 1109-11.

¹²¹ Matter of B-, 21 I&N Dec. at 70.

¹²² Id.

¹²³ Id.

truthfulness may not be held by all cultures from which refugee and asylum applicants originate.

In properly analyzing an applicant's demeanor, the Seventh Circuit said that adjudicators must avoid:

[I]nsensitivity to the possibility of misunderstandings caused by the use of translators of difficult languages such as Chinese, and relatedly, insensitivity to the difficulty of basing a determination of credibility on the demeanor of a person from a culture remote from the American, such as the Chinese. Behaviors that in our culture are considered evidence of unreliability, such as refusing to look a person in the eyes when he is talking to you, are in Asian cultures a sign of respect.¹²⁴

In Anglo-American cultures, people who avert their gaze when answering a question, or seem nervous, may be perceived as untruthful. In other cultures, however, body language does not convey the same message. In certain Asian cultures, for example, people will avert their eyes when speaking to an authority figure as a sign of respect. This is a product of culture, and is not necessarily an indicator of credibility.

3. Effects of trauma

The psychological or physical trauma suffered by some asylum applicants may affect an applicant's demeanor in a way that may otherwise signal a lack of truthfulness.

The Asylum Gender Guidelines ("Considerations for Asylum Officers Adjudicating Asylum Claims from Women") describe the difficulties inherent in judging the demeanor of asylum applicants, male or female:

The demeanor of traumatized applicants can vary. They may appear numb or show emotional passivity when recounting past events of mistreatment. Some applicants may give matter-of-fact recitations of serious instances of mistreatment. Trauma may also cause memory loss or distortion, and may cause other applicants to ¹²⁴ Lao v. Gonzales, 400 F.3d 530, 534 (7th Cir. 2005) (citations omitted); see RAIO Training Module, Cross-Cultural Communication, for a more detailed discussion of cross-cultural factors that may impede communication at an interview.

Please be cognizant that the interpreter's and applicant's inexperience with interpretation and the interview process can be an impediment to good communication.

Candor or Responsiveness

"Candor" is "the quality of being open, sincere and honest."¹³¹ The ability and willingness of an asylum applicant to respond to all the questions asked of him or her and to do so in a direct and forthright manner may be a relevant positive consideration in making a credibility determination.

An applicant who is found to be evasive in responding to questions, or who fails to respond at all, may have this considered as a negative factor in a credibility determination based upon the totality of the circumstances in the case. Similar to demeanor, case law indicates lack of candor should generally not be the exclusive basis for an adverse credibility determination.

1. Considerations

In deciding whether an applicant has testified with candor and in a responsive manner during an asylum interview, you have the difficult task of determining certain issues, such as "whether a question that may appear poorly worded was, in fact, confusing or well understood by those who heard it; whether a witness who hesitated in a response was nevertheless attempting truthfully to recount what he recalled of key events or struggling to remember the lines of a carefully crafted 'script; and whether inconsistent responses are the product of innocent error or intentional falsehood."¹³²

Where an applicant uses an interpreter to translate questions and responses, apparently evasive or unresponsive answers by the applicant may instead indicate translation problems or interpreter incompetence.¹³³

The applicant may also appear evasive or unresponsive as a result of past interpretation); and Ilunga v. Holder, 777 F.3d at 207-208 (holding that an inconsistency cannot be relied upon when "there is a strong indication it results from translation errors or language-based misunderstanding, particularly when it is belied by an extensive record of otherwise consistent statements and corroborating evidence").

¹³¹ Merriam-Webster's Advanced Learner's English Dictionary, Merriam-Webster, Inc., 2008.

¹³² Zhang v. US DOJ, 386 F.3d 66, 73 (2d Cir. 2004).

¹³³ Perez-Lastor v. INS, 208 F.3d 773, 778 (9th Cir. 2000); Zahedi v. INS, 222 F.3d 1157, 1166-67 (9th Cir. 2000); Giday v. Gonzales, 434 F.3d 543 (7th Cir. 2006).

believed by the IJ to be a sign of evasiveness, but was found by the BIA to be an inadequate basis for the IJ's negative credibility finding.¹⁴⁴ The BIA found that the applicant's "requests for clarification appear to have been conscientious attempts to provide the information sought by the questioner rather than attempts to evade answering."¹⁴⁵

In another case, the IJ found the applicant's testimony not credible because it was evasive, general and inconsistent. The Ninth Circuit refused to uphold the judge's decision because a review of the record showed that the applicant "tried to give specific dates but was often hampered by his reliance on the translator to convert those dates from the Islamic to Christian calendar."¹⁴⁶ The record showed that the applicant tried to overcome this problem by noting how much time passed between the events he was describing.¹⁴⁷ The Court noted that "[w]hile it is true that these answers might be frustrating to one trying to make a clear timeline, since they were relational rather than fixed dates, these answers are by no means evasive."¹⁴⁸

Example:

Applicant's candor/responsiveness can support an overall positive credibility finding

In rejecting a trial attorney's argument that an applicant was not credible, the BIA noted in Matter of Pula that "[t]he IJ found the applicant credible after observing his demeanor and listening to his testimony for 8 hours over a period of 2 days."¹⁴⁹ The BIA concluded, "[i]n view of the detail, consistency, and candor of the applicant's lengthy testimony, we do not find that his credibility is impeached by the minor discrepancies in his written application, which was prepared with the assistance of interpreters."¹⁵⁰

Minor discrepancies

¹⁴⁴ Matter of B-, 21 I&N Dec. 66, 70 (BIA 1995).

¹⁴⁵ Id.

¹⁴⁶ Zahedi v. INS, 222 F.3d 1157, 1166 (9th Cir. 2000).

¹⁴⁷ Id.

¹⁴⁸ Id.

¹⁴⁹ Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. 467, 470 (BIA 1987).

¹⁵⁰ Id. at 472.

Plausibility

"Considering the totality of the circumstances, and all relevant factors, a trier of fact may base a credibility determination on the inherent plausibility of the applicant's or witness's account[.]"¹⁵¹

Example:

The applicant in Xiu Ying Wu claimed that three family-planning officials visited her home and, upon confirming she was unmarried, forced her to terminate her pregnancy.¹⁵² In support of her application, the applicant provided a 'Family Planning Birth Control Operation Certificate stating an abortion had been performed, the receipt from the fines she paid to the family planning office, and a letter from her employer discharging her for violation of China's family-planning laws. In immigration court, DHS countered with the 2007 China Profile of Asylum Claims and Country Conditions (Country Profile) and other documentary evidence.¹⁵³

Relying in part on the Country Profile, the IJ found the applicant not credible because her story was implausible. However, the Eleventh Circuit reversed the negative credibility determination, holding that it can do so if it is "based solely on speculation and conjecture."¹⁵⁴ The court added that "[i]n the absence of evidence to support it, an IJ's bald assertion that a given account is implausible does not necessarily make it so[;]" thus, and though the substantial evidence standard greatly constrains our examination of the IJ's findings, even its yoke does not bind us where, as here, the IJ's conclusion fairly appears to have been invented out of whole cloth."¹⁵⁵

Regarding country reports, the court emphasized that "blind reliance" on State Department reports, without more, may be insufficient to satisfy the requirement that an adverse credibility determination be supported by specific, cogent reasons.¹⁵⁶

¹⁵¹ INA § 208 (b)(1)(B)(iii).

¹⁵² Xiu Ying Wu v. U.S. Atty. Gen., 712 F.3d 486, 489 (11th Cir. 2013).

¹⁵³ Id. at 490.

¹⁵⁴ Id. at 494 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

¹⁵⁵ Id.

¹⁵⁶ Id. at 495 (emphasis added) (quoting Xia v. U.S. Atty' Gen., 608 F.3d 1233, 1240 (11th Cir. 2010) (relying on a State Department report and other factors in finding the applicant not credible). But see Singh v. Lynch, 802 F.3d

ASM Supplement

Corroboration

The REAL ID Act amended the INA with regard to corroborative evidence. The statute provides that the applicant's testimony may be sufficient to sustain his burden of proof without corroboration if it "is credible, is persuasive, and refers to specific facts sufficient to demonstrate that the applicant is a refugee."¹⁵⁷ To give effect to the plain meaning of the statute and each of the terms therein, an applicant's testimony must satisfy all three prongs of the "credible, persuasive, and...specific" test in order to establish his or her burden of proof without corroboration.¹⁵⁸

An asylum applicant may establish eligibility with testimony alone. However, if you, as the trier of fact, determine that other evidence is needed to corroborate the otherwise credible testimony of the applicant, you should request the evidence and the applicant must either: 1) provide the evidence; or 2) provide a reasonable explanation as to why he or she cannot provide the evidence.¹⁵⁹ Failure to produce the required evidence or a reasonable explanation of why it cannot be produced is a failure of proof.¹⁶⁰

¹⁵⁷ 972, 974 (9th Cir. 2015) (holding that the IJ and the BIA could base a credibility determination on the inherent implausibility of the applicant's testimony and the consistency of that testimony with the background evidence in the record).

¹⁵⁸ See RAIO Training Module, Evidence - Asylum Division Supplement, at 42-43.

¹⁵⁹ See INA § 208 (b)(1)(B)(ii); see also Rapheal v. Mukasey, 533 F.3d 521, 527 (7th Cir. 2008); Matter of J-Y-C-, 24 I&N Dec. 260, 263 (BIA 2007).

¹⁶⁰ See the RAIO Training Module on Evidence, for a more detailed discussion of corroboration and the appropriate considerations for determining when a request for corroboration is reasonable.

entered against an Iraqi who claimed past persecution at the hands of the Hussein regime.¹⁶⁶ The court found the applicant eligible for asylum and withholding, however, as a result of the significant documentary evidence in the record establishing he would be viewed as an opponent of the regime and persecuted upon his return to Iraq because he was part of a group of Iraqis airlifted by the American government out of Iraq. The court held that “[t]here is, in short, substantial, non-testimonial, evidence in the record of the significant danger that [the applicant] and others involved in the American airlift would face if deported to Iraq, evidence from which no reasonable person could conclude otherwise.”¹⁶⁷

ASM Supplement

Consular Consolidated Database

Since October of 2006, Asylum Officers have had authorized access to the Department of State's Consular Consolidated Database (CCD). The CCD holds selected history and outcome information concerning immigrant and nonimmigrant visa applications processed by consular officers at visa issuing posts worldwide. This can be a powerful tool for you to use at the time of the interview. There are a few caveats in using CCD information both during the interview and in the assessment.¹⁶⁸

1. Confidentiality – visa application information is considered confidential.¹⁶⁹ You should keep in mind the distinction between information contained in the CCD that has been supplied by the applicant (which may be revealed to the applicant) and information that comes from official sources (such as comments added by consular officials, which may not be revealed to the applicant). Some types of information contained in the CCD that may be revealed to the applicant include:

¹⁶⁶ Al-Harbi v. INS, 242 F.3d 882 (9th Cir. 2001).

¹⁶⁷ Id. at 894.

¹⁶⁸ Langlois, Joseph, INS Office of International Affairs, Asylum Division Access to the Department of State's Consular Consolidated Database and Use of Consular Affairs Visa Data in Asylum Adjudications, Memorandum to Asylum Office Directors, SAOs, AOs (Washington, DC: October 6, 2006).

¹⁶⁹ Langlois, Joseph, INS Office of International Affairs, Disclosure of Consular Affairs Visa Data in Asylum Adjudications, Memorandum to Asylum Office Directors, SAOs, AOs (Washington, DC: 24 January 2008).

the fact that the applicant applied for a visa, the fact that the applicant was present at a U.S. Embassy or Consulate in a particular location on a particular date, the fact that the applicant presented a particular document to the consular officer as part of the visa adjudication process, the fact that the applicant was issued or refused a visa, or any biographical information such as name, date of birth, address available in the CCD record as provided in a visa application (for example, the DS-156 form).

2. You must never refer to the CCD by name during the interview or in the written assessment. When confronting an applicant with contradictory information found in the CCD, you should refer to the information in general terms such as, "government records indicate...", or "our records show...". If CCD information is referenced in the assessment, you should refer to "Department of State records".
3. Contradictions between CCD information and an applicant's asylum testimony, both in the application and the interview, will often raise the issue of fraud. You should follow the appropriate established procedures when this issue is raised.

For more information on the use of the CCD please refer to, Langlois, Joseph. INS Office of International Affairs. Disclosure of Consular Affairs Visa Data in Asylum Adjudications, Memorandum to Asylum Office Directors, SAOs, AOs (Washington, DC: 24 January 2008).

ASM Supplement

Legal Analysis – Is the Credibility Factor Relevant in View of the Totality of the Circumstances?

A proper credibility assessment requires that you first identify which factors are present in the case that may impact the credibility determination in the totality of the circumstances. As outlined by the statute, the factors that may be relevant to the credibility determination include the following:

- the consistency between the applicant's or witness's written and oral statements (whenever made and whether or not under oath, and considering the circumstances under which the statements were made),
- the internal consistency of each such statement,
- the consistency of such statements with other evidence of record (including the reports of the Department of State on country conditions),
- the inherent plausibility of the applicant's account,
- any inaccuracies or falsehoods in such statements, without regard to whether an inconsistency, inaccuracy, or falsehood goes to the heart of the applicant's claim,
- the demeanor, candor, or responsiveness of the applicant, or
- any other relevant factor.

Once you have identified which credibility factors are relevant to the applicant's asylum claim, you must then weigh their relevance under the totality of the circumstances standard, and make an explicit credibility determination.

Effect of credibility flaws that are deemed irrelevant:

If a non-credible assertion is irrelevant and the claim is approvable on credible facts, the assertion that is irrelevant and not credible does not generally lead to a finding of ineligibility. The asylum claim must be evaluated based on the totality of the circumstances and all the relevant evidence.

Effect of false statements that are relevant:

An unexplained, relevant, credibility flaw defeats that portion of the claim related to the credibility flaw. If the applicant has not provided additional credible evidence sufficient to establish eligibility for asylum, the applicant will be found not credible and referred or denied.

Split Credibility:

There may be cases where a relevant part of the testimony is found not credible, but the credible parts of the testimony are sufficient to establish asylum eligibility.

The applicant's testimony is found not credible because it was implausible. The applicant stated that he was able to escape from the police because he had magic powers that rendered him invisible. This explanation of the circumstances of his escape is not reasonable as there is an absence of objective evidence to support that such magical powers exist, and the applicant provided no other explanation for his ability to escape.

b. Relevance

After you identify the factor that you found not credible and explain the reason(s), you must then explain why the non-credible factor is relevant to the asylum claim.

Example:

The applicant's inability to provide detailed testimony to credibly establish that he is Christian is relevant to his claim, because his claim is based on fear of persecution for having converted from Islam to Christianity.

c. Totality of the Circumstances

After analyzing all identified factors, you must consider the totality of the circumstances and determine if the applicant's testimony is credible.

Example:

The applicant testified that he was imprisoned and beaten because of his ethnicity and refusal to engage in combat when he was conscripted into the military. He provided detailed testimony regarding the reasons why he was opposed to fighting, as well as his time in detention and subsequent incidents of harassment. He was unable, however, to name with particularity the orders to engage in combat to which he had consciously objected, stating generally that it was the order to "bear arms" and "participate in war." While the applicant's testimony was vague regarding certain aspects of his claim, he presented testimony concerning his beliefs and incidents of harm that was quite detailed, internally and externally consistent, and corroborated by documentary evidence. Therefore, the applicant's testimony was found credible under the totality of the circumstances.

Example:

The applicant testified that he was a Falun Gong practitioner and that he owned an internet bar and video rental store in China. He downloaded information on Falun Gong and distributed it to members of his community. As a result, the police raided his video rental store, and detained and beat him for four days.

The applicant's testimony was found not credible because it presented internal inconsistencies and was inconsistent with other evidence in the record.

The applicant's testimony contained inconsistencies related to the number of people he practiced Falun Gong with, whether he practiced Falun Gong with his family, the date he opened his internet bar, where exactly he downloaded the Falun Gong materials, whether the police seized the CDs from his store at the time of his arrest, as well as numerous other inconsistencies.

[Full analysis must specifically address at least one of the factors that form the basis of the adverse credibility finding]

The applicant testified that he downloaded Falun Gong materials from the internet using a computer at his store, which was consistent with the statement in his written affidavit. Later in the interview he testified that all the materials were downloaded using a computer at his mother's house. When asked for an explanation for this inconsistency the applicant stated that he did not remember making the earlier statement and that the information in the affidavit was incorrect because there were no computers at his store. The applicant's explanation is not reasonable as his initial testimony was provided in response to an open ended question asking him to describe how he downloaded materials. This is relevant to his claim that he was arrested and harmed because he downloaded and distributed Falun Gong materials.

法伦功骗子。

Given the numerous inconsistencies and the lack of reasonable explanations for his inability to testify consistently, the applicant's testimony is found not credible under the totality of the circumstances.

3. Split Credibility Finding

As discussed in the RAIO Credibility training module, you may determine that part of the applicant's testimony is not credible, but that another part is credible. You must identify those parts of the testimony that were found not credible, explain why they were found not credible, and assess the reasonableness of the applicant's explanation when given an opportunity to explain the credibility flaw. You must also state how they are relevant to the applicant's claim. When making a split credibility determination, the assessment must also separately identify those parts of the claim that were deemed credible.

A split credibility analysis requires that you determine what effect the non-credible portions of the testimony have on the applicant's overall eligibility. For instance, an applicant may be credible concerning issues relevant to his/her past persecution, but not credible concerning issues relevant to establishing that a mandatory bar does not apply.

Example:

The applicant claims he was persecuted because he was an active member of an opposition political party in country X and because he belongs to a minority ethnic group. The applicant's testimony that he belonged to the opposition party is not credible. However, the applicant credibly established membership in the minority ethnic group. Country conditions reports show that members of the ethnic group are subject to a pattern or practice of persecution.

General Considerations

Avoid confusing the credibility analysis with the analysis of other legal elements of the claim.

Well-founded Fear: A determination about an applicant's credibility should be distinguished from his/her claim of well-founded fear. For example, the credibility finding should focus on whether the events the applicant described actually occurred, not the degree of risk an applicant may face upon return.

Return to country of persecution: Generally, the fact that an applicant has returned to the country of persecution, after having arrived safely in the U.S. or a third country, is considered part of the analysis of well-founded fear. Some circuit courts have upheld adverse credibility findings that have been based, in part, on the applicant's return to the country of persecution.¹⁷² However, you should be very careful when considering a return to the country of persecution as part of the credibility analysis.

As stated by the Seventh Circuit, “[a] proposition that any voluntary return to one's home country renders any claim regarding past and future persecution incredible would be far too broad a proposition to serve as a working rule for assessing an alien's testimony.”¹⁷³

Examples:

Inappropriate

The applicant's fear of future persecution is ~~not credible~~ because it is not reasonable for the applicant to fear harm after remaining safely in her country for 10 years after she was threatened.

Appropriate

The applicant's testimony was consistent, detailed, and plausible. Therefore it is credible.

The applicant's ability to remain safely in her country for ten years after she was threatened indicates that the authorities do not have the inclination to harm her. Therefore, the applicant has failed to establish that her fear of future persecution is well-founded.

The assessment or NOID should contain a firm credibility finding.

You must avoid making a tentative credibility determination by making non-committal statements such as, “It is difficult to completely believe the information the applicant provided,” or “The applicant's testimony stretches the imagination.”

Your personal opinions should be absent from the written credibility

¹⁷² Loho v. Mukasey, 531 F.3d 1016, 1018-1019 (9th Cir. 2008); Tarraf v. Gonzales, 495 F.3d 525, 530, 534 (7th Cir. 2007); Jean v. Gonzales, 416 F.3d 87, 89, 91 (1st Cir. 2006).

¹⁷³ Tarraf v. Gonzales, 495 F.3d at 534.